Verse 13. In the word of righteousness] That is in the more solid doctrine of the Gospel concerning Christ, who is our righteousness.

Verse 14. To them that are of full age] Or that are perfect, comparatively perfect, not only past the spoon, but full grown. τελείων.

Who by reason of use] Gr. By reason of habit, got by continual custome, and long practice, as in an expert Artist.

Have their senses exercised] Their inward senses; for the soul also hath her senses, as the body hath. Instead of seeing, faith; of hearing, obedience; of smelling, hope; of tasting, charity; of touching, humility. These are exercised in the Saints with such an exercise as wrestlers use, or such as contend for victory; put forth to the utmost, as that which they have been trained up to, and can therefore very well skill of. αἰσθητήρια.

To discern good and evil] Doth not the ear try words, and the mouth taste his meat? Job 12. 11. Eye hath not seen &c. 1 Cor. 2. 9. Where the carcase is the Eagles will be. Saints have a spiritual sagacity; and they lay hold on eternal life.

Chap. VI.

Verse 1. Let us go on unto perfection]

Gr. Let us be carried on, as with a force, Acts 2. 2. breaking thorow all impediments, aiming at the highest pitch, and eying the best patterns. It is a low and unworthy strain in some to labour after no more grace then will keep life and soul together, that is, hell and soul asunder. φερώμεθα.

Repentance from dead works] These are the six Principles of Christian religion, that must be laid as a foundation. Certa semper sunt in paucis, saith Tertullian. Fundamentals are but few; few they are in number, but many in vertue; in sight small, but great in weight; like gold, which being solid, is contracted into a narrow room, but may be drawn into so large an extent, that one Angel may cover an acre of ground, as the Naturalists have observed. The Apostles Creed (anciently called symbolum, a sign or badge to distinguish Christians from Infidels and wicked people) was heretofore briefer then now. The mention of the Fathers being Maker of heaven and earth: the Sons burial, and descending into hell, and the Communion of Saints being wholly omitted; haply are not necessary for all men to know, as Suarez saith, or sufficiently implied in other Articles, or known by the light of reason; and so not making difference between Christians and heathens. The Papists have lately coyned twelve new Articles, by the Authority of Pope Pius the fourth, Anno 1564. raised out of the Council of Trent, and added to the Nicene Creed, to be received with oath, as the true Catholike faith, to be believed by as many as shall be saved. Those that list to see them, may read the Epistle before Bishop Jewels works, and Sir Humphrey Lands via tuta. Whereunto if they will add the Jesuites new ten commandments, let them read the Spanish Pilgrim.

Usier.

Verse 2. Doctrine of baptisms] Inward and outward, Flaminis & fluminis, of water, and of the spirit, that washing of regeneration, and renewing of the holy Ghost, Tit. 3. 5. Calvin thinks the Apostle meaneth the solemn rites or set days of baptising. Others, the doctrine of both the Sacraments; one being figuratively put for both, and the mention of the Lords supper omitted, because the doctrine thereof was not anciently propounded to the Catechumeni or young Christians; neither were they suffered to see it administred.

And of laying on of hands] Hereby is meant the whole Ministery, and order of Church-government, as prescribed by the Word. The Scripture is to be taken in the largest sense, if nothing hinder, neither matter, phrase, nor scope.

vilsons theol. rules.

Verse 3. If God permit] If God give me life and ability, and you capacity and stability: for many fall away, whose damnation sleepeth not.

Verse 4. Who were once enlightened] Knowing persons, and those they call the wits of the world, are in greatest danger of the unpardonable sin: which begins in apostacy, holds on in persecution, ends in blasphemy.

φωτισθεντας, as with a flash of lightning.

And have tasted] As Cooks do their sauces with the tip of their finger only; or as the Israelites tasted the fruits of the land, and yet perished in the wilderness. Men may taste that which they spet out again, as Physitians oft do.

The heavenly gift] Gr. Supercelestial gift, i. e. Christ, who is called the gift, Joh. 4. 10. and the benefit, 1 Tim. 6. 2.

Partakers of the holy Ghost] Of his common and inferiour gifts and operations. These a man may lose, and have his dispositions to sin seven times more enflamed then before, Mat. 12. 44.

Verse 5. And have tasted the good word] Catching at the promises, as children do at sweet-meats, rejoycing therein, as the stony-ground-hearers did, conceiving a rowling opinion, as Haman did, that they are the men whom the King of heaven will honour.

And the powers of the world to come] i. e. The wonderful works of the world to come, as glorification, resurrection, last judgement, whereinto an hypocrite may see far, and have a glimpse of heaven, or a flash of hell upon his conscience, as Balaam, Spira.

Verse 6. If they shall fall away] Totally and finally, as Judas and Julian did, and as Mr. John Glover thought he had done, and did therefore eat his meat against appetite, only to defer the time of his damnation, which, by mistake of this text, he thought he could not possibly avoid. But God, who comforteth those that are cast down, did not only at last rid him out of all his fears, but also framed him to such mortification of life, as the like lightly hath not been seen, saith Mr. Fox, who knew it.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1552.

And put him to an open shame] As if they had not found him the same that they took him for. In those that have wilfully resisted divine truths made known to them, and after taste, despised them, a perswasion that God hath forsaken them (set on strongly by Satan) stirs up an hellish hatred against God; carrying them to a revengeful desire of opposing whatsoever is Gods, though not always openly (for then they should lose the advantage of doing hurt) yet secretly and subtilly, and under pretence of the contrary, as one well observeth.

Verse 7. And bringeth forth herbs] So the fruitful Christian (that watered with the Word and Spirit, bringeth forth a harvest of holiness) shall receive the blessing of encrease, Joh. 15. 2. Such trees as brought forth fruit fit for meat, were not to be destroyed, Deut 20. 19. But trees that were not for fruit, were for the fire, Mat. 3. 10. The earth thankfully returns her burden to the painful tiller. Let earth teach earth, terra quam terimus, terram quam gerimus, the earth we tear, the earth we bear.

Verse 8. Is rejected, and is nigh to cursing] The sin against the holy Ghost is therefore unparunpardonable, because God (not suffering himself to be derided, or his spirit of truth to be found a lyar) smiteth these sinners against their own souls, with blindness and reprobacy of mind. Whence follows, 1. An impossibility of repentance, sith it is the work of that Spirit whom they have despited, and will not suffer any saving operation of his to fasten on their souls. 2. Such a desperate fury invadeth them, that they resist and repudiate the matter of remission, the blood of Christ, whereby if they might have mercy, yet they would not; but continue raving and raging against both the Physick and the Physitian, to their endless ruth and ruine.

Verse 9. But beloved, we are perswaded] He would not be mistaken. Zuinglius when he had inveighed against vice, would usually close up his discourse with Probe vir haec nihil ad te. All this is nothing to thee, thou honest man. We can hardly beat the dogs out of doors but the children will cry. Scultet. Annal.

Things that accompany salvation] Gr. That have salvation, that comprehend it, are contiguous to it, and touch upon it. Grace and glory differ not but in degree. ἐχόμενα, i.e. καὶ ἔχόμενα.

Verse 10. For God is not unrighteous] That is, unfaithful, 1 Joh. 1. 9. There is a justice of fidelity, as well as of equity.

To forget your work] The Butler may forget Joseph, and Joseph forget his fathers house: but forgetfulness befals not God, to whom all things are present, and before whom there is written a book of remembrance for them that fear the Lord, and think upon his name, Mal. 3. 17.

Verse 11. Do shew the same diligence] A man may as truly say the sea burns, or fire cools, as that certainty of salvation breeds security and loosness.

To the full assurance] All duties tend to assurance, or spring from it. Strive we must to the riches of full assurance, Col. 2. 2. But in case our assurance be not so fair, yield not to temptations and carnal reasonings. Coyns that have little of the stamp left, yet are currant.

Verse 12. That ye be not slothful] A ready heart makes riddance of Gods work. Shake off sloth. Spontaneæ lassitudines morbos loquuntur, saith Hippocrates. Sure I am, that dulness and luskishness argue a diseased soul. Hippoc. Aphorism.

But followers of them] It was a good law that the Ephesians made, that men should propound to themselves the best patterns, and ever bear in mind some eminent man. Ἄριστον ἐστὶ μνημονεύειν πρὸς τῶν τῆ ἀρετῆ χρωμένων.

Verse 13. For when God made promise] Of those many that by faith and patience had inherited the promises, the Apostle instanceth in Abraham, famous both for his faith in Gods promise, verse 13. and for his patience, v. 15.

Verse 14. Blessing I will bless thee] Now he whom God blesseth shall be blessed, as Isaac said of Iacob, Gen. 27. 33.

Verse 15. After he had patiently endured] Waited many years for an Isaac, and yet longer for eternal life. I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord, saith dying Iacob, Gen. 49. 18.

Verse 16. Swear by the greater] So do not they that swear by sundry creatures and qualities, God can hardly spare such, Ier. 5. 7. That passage, As thy soul liveth, is not an oath, but an asseveration, or obtestation only, conjoyned with the oath.

An end of all strife] The end of an oath is to help the truth in necessity, and to clear mens innocency, Exod. 22. 11.

Verse 17. God willing more abundantly] His word is sufficient, yet tendering our infirmity he hath bound it with an oath, and set to his seal. His word cannot be made more true, but yet more credible. Now two things make a thing more credible. 1. The quality of the person speaking. 2. The manner of the speech. If God do not simply speak, but solemnly swear, and seal to us remission of sins, and adoption of sons by the broad seal of the Sacraments, and by the privy seal of his Spirit, Should we not rest assured?

Verse 18. We might have strong] Such as swalloweth up all worldly griefs, as Moses his serpent did the Sorcerers serpents, or as the fire doth the fewel. The Sacraments are Gods visible oaths unto us: he taketh, as it were, the body and blood of his Son into his hand, and solemnly sweareth to bestow upon us all the purchase of Christs passion. Should not therefore the joy of the Lord be our strength? The comforts of Philosophy are λῆροι καὶ φλύαρα (as Plato hath it, as Socrates found it, when he was to die) that is, toys and trifles. Nescio quomodò imbecillior est medecina quam morbus, saith Cicero, the Nehem. 8. 10.

diſeaſe is too hard for the medicine. But the conſolations of God are ſtrong in themſelves, and ſhould not be ſmall with us, Job 15. 11.

To lay hold upon the hope, &c.] Gr. To lay hold by main force, and ſo to hold, as not to looſe our hold, when the devil would pull it from us. It is our faith that he fights againſt, our hope that he would ſhred us off. Look to it. κρατῆσαι.

Verſe 19. Both ſure and ſtedfaſt] Spes in terrenis, incerti nomen boni: Spes in divinis, nomen eſt certiſſimi.

And which entereth into that] This anchor is caſt upward, and faſtened not in the depth of the ſea, but in the height of heaven, whereof it gets firm hold, and ſure poſſeſſion. Now that ſhip (ſaith one) may be toſſed, not ſhipwrackt, whereof Chriſt is the Pilot, the Scripture the compaſs, the Promiſes the tacklings, hope the anchor, faith the cable, the holy Ghoſt the winds, and holy affections the ſails, which are filled with the graces of the Spirit.

Verſe 20. Whither the fore-runner] Like as the high-prieſt once a year entred into the Holy of Holies to pray for the people.

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. For this Melchiſedech]

SOme make him the ſame with Shem: Others ſay it was the holy Ghoſt, others ſay it was Chriſt himſelf under the habit of a King and Prieſt. It is moſt probable that he was a mortal man, and a Canaanite, but yet a moſt righteous man, and a Prieſt of the moſt high God by ſpecial diſpenſation: And that Kedarlaomer and the other Kings that over-ran the countrey, and ſpoiled it, forbare out of reverence to the man and his office, to meddle with Melchiſedechs territories.

Verſe 2. Gave a tenth part of all] So to ſet forth his thankfulneſs to God for the victory. The Lod is the man of war, Exod. 15. 3. The Lord and victor of wars, as the Chaldee there expreſſeth it. Conquerours ſhould ſend to him, as Joab to David, to take the honour of the day, 2 Sam. 12. 28. The very Heathens, after a victory, would conſecrate ſomething to their Gods. The Romans had a cuſtome, when they had received any great victory, the Conquerour in his triumphant charet rode to the Capitol: where in all humility he did preſent a palm to Jupiter, and offer in ſacrifice a white bullock: ſo acknowledging it was his power whereby the conqueſt was atchieved.

——laurumque ſuperbum in gremio Jovis abſciſſis deponere Penis. Et taurum albam Jovi mactabunt. Liv. Lib. 6. decad. 3.

Verſe 3. Without Father] viz. That we finde mentioned in the holy Scripture. Hence the Melchiſedechian hereticks held, That he was the holy Ghoſt; or at leaſt ſome created Angel. See Cunæus de Rep. Heb. l. 3. cap. 3. without father and mother he was not in reſpect of generation, but in reſpect of commemoration; his parents are not mentioned: no more are Jobs or the three childrens.

Like unto the Son of God] As having neither fellow nor ſucceſſour. And being a lively type of Chriſt, who is the true Triſmegiſt, in regard of his three offices. The Heathens called their Mercury (haply the ſame with Melchiſedech) Triſmegiſt, or thrice-great; becauſe he was the greateſt Philoſopher, the greateſt Prieſt, and the greateſt King. Marcil. Ficin in arg. ad Triſ. Pimandr.

Ver. 4. How great this man was] It is goodneſs that renders a man great, and the grace of God that enobleth, Iſa. 43. 4 Heb. 11. 2. Keep cloſe to God, and then ye ſhall be ſome of Gods Rabbins; as Daniel calls them, Chap. 9. 27. See Job 32. 9 Great men indeed; not with a belluine, but with a genuine greatneſs.

The tenth of the ſpoils] Gr. The top of the heap. ἀκροθινια.

M. Harris. Verſe 5. To take tythes of the people] If tythes be Jewiſh, ſaith one, and yet Miniſters muſt have a maintenance, how will men ſatisfie their conſciences in the particular quantity they muſt beſtow upon them? The Scripture ſpeaks only of the tenth part. Can any ſhew us where the old apportion is reverſed, and which is that quota pars now that conſcience muſt reſt in?

Verſe 6. Received tythes of Abraham] Gr. Tythed or tenthed Abraham, by the ſame Divine Right whereby he bleſſed him. Melchiſedech did not take only that which Abraham was pleaſed to give him, but he tythed him, ſaith the text, he took the tenths as his due. Δεδεκάτωκε.

Verſe 7. The leſs is bleſſed &c.] The Paſtour therefore bleſſing his people according to his office, is greater then his people in that reſpect.

Verſe 8. That he liveth] Tythes then are due to the Miniſters of Chriſt that liveth, becauſe due to Melchiſedech, to whom Abraham paid them as a Prieſt, and tythe-taker and type of Chriſt. Who therefore ſhould receive them for him, but thoſe that are in his ſtead? 2 Cor. 5. 20.

Verſe 9. Levi alſo paied tythes] If any ſhall object, So did Chriſt alſo, ſith he was in the loins of Abraham too; It may be anſwered, That though Chriſt was of Abraham, yet he was not by Abraham. But Levi was both.

Verſe 10. In the loins of his father] So we were all in the loins of Adam when he fell (as all the County is in a Parliament-man) and fell with him.

Verſe 11. If therefore perfection] i. e. Juſtification, Sanctification, Salvation.

Verſe 12. A change alſo of the Law] For We are not under the law, but under grace. The Goſpel is poſt naufragium tabula, a plank after ſhipwrack, and hath its remuneration, Heb. 11. 6. viz. of grace and mercy. By Law here ſome underſtood only the law of Prieſthood.

Verſe 13. Pertaineth to another tribe] That of Judah, v. 14. which therefore is firſt reckoned, Revel. 7. among thoſe that were ſealed; As of thoſe that came by Rachel, Nephtali hath the firſt place: becauſe in that tribe Chriſt dwelt, viz. at Capernaum; Ut utrob que ſuperemineat Chriſti prærogativa.

Verſe 14. Nothing concerning Prieſthood] For when Reuben by defiling Bilhah, loſt his birth-right, the birth-right was given to Joſeph; the kingdom to Judah, and the Prieſthood to Levi. But God tranſlated the Prieſthood, and ſetled it upon his Son Chriſt, who ſprang out of Judah, in a time when it was commonly bought and ſold to the vileſt of men, and all was out of order.

Verſe 15. After the ſimilitude of Melchiſedech] i. e. After an order diſtinct and different from that of Aaron.

Verſe 16. Of a carnal command] i. e. External and ceremonial.

But after the power] Both of God the Father, who made him a Prieſt, and of God the Son, who is the Father of eternity, Iſa. 9. 6. and a Prieſt for ever: which word [for ever] the Apoſtle expoundeth and improveth in the laſt clauſe of this verſe, The power of an endleſs life.

Verſe 17. For he teſtifieth] Thus the Author ſtill argueth out of Scripture, as knowing that, Quicquid non habet authoritatem ex Scripturis, eadem facilitate contemnitur qua approbatur, Whatſoever is not grounded upon Scripture authority, is as eaſily rejected as received. Hieron.

Verſe 18. For there is verily a diſannulling] Gr. An outing, caſſating, expunging. Ἀθέτησις.

Of the commandment] See the Note on Ver. 12. & 16.

For the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs] ſc. To juſtifie, ſanctifie, ſave, Rom 8 2. though as a ſchoolmaſter to Chriſt, and a rule of life, it is of ſingular uſe ſtill.

Verſe 19. But the bringing in] The Law is a ſuperintroduction to Chriſt our hope, who is the end of the Law to every believer, Rom. 10. 4.

We draw nigh to God] Having boldneſs and acceſs with confidence by the faith of Chriſt our high-prieſt: who leads us by the hand, and preſents us to his heavenly father, as Joſeph did his two ſons to Jacob, that he might bleſs them. Ephes. 3. 11.

Verſe 20. Not without an oath] A ſingular confirmation: what a monſtrous ſin then is unbelief?

Verſe 21. And will not repent] Will not change his minde upon pretence that ſecond thoughts are beſt. Thoſe that can play with oaths, and can ſlip them as eaſily as monkies do their collars, have nothing of God in them.

Verſe 22. Jeſus was made a ſurety] As he was our ſurety to God for the diſcharge of our debt (the ſurety and debtour in law are reputed as one perſon) ſo he is God's ſurety to us, for the performance of his promiſes. Chriſt was the ſurety of the firſt covenant (ſaith One) to pay the debt; of the ſecond covenant, to perform the duty.

Verse 23. By reason of death] Neither their holiness, nor learning could priviledge them from deaths impartial stroke. ——Non te tua plurima Penthen, labentem texit pietas. All our learning also is soon refuted with one black Theta, which understanding us not, snappeth us unrespectively without distinction, and putteth at once a period to our reading, and to our being.

Verse 24. He continueth ever] What need then is there of a Vicar, as the Pope will needs be stiled?

ἀπαράβατον. An unchangeable] Gr. Impassable. He needeth no successor.

Verse 25. To the uttermost] Perpetually and perfectly, so as none shall need to come after him to finish what he hath begun. He is a through-Saviour, a Saviour in solidum, and doth not his work to the halves. How blasphemous then is that direction of the Papists to dying men, Conjunge, Domine, obsequium meum cum omnibus quæ Christus passus est pro me. Joyn, Lord, mine obedience with all those things that Christ hath suffered for me?

Verse 26. Who is holy] As the high-Priest of old, *Lev.*21. 18. Exod. 28.

Harmless] Without any birth-blot.

Undefiled] Free from actual pollution, without original blemish or actual blot, 1 *Pet.*1. 19.

Higher then the heavens] That is, then the Angels, those heavenly Courtiers, *Dan.*10 13.

καθ' ἡμέραν. Verse 27. Who needeth not daily] Or, On a certain day of the year, &c. at the feast of the expiations, Levit. 16. 29. See Heb. 10. 1.

First for his own sins] Else how could he stand before God for others; The Priests therefore had their laver wherein to wash, before they offered any mans sacrifice. The brazen Altar stood without, the incense-altar of gold within the Sanctuary; to signifie that our own lusts must be sacrificed, ere we take upon us to pray for our selves or others. David observeth this method, Psal. 25. & Psal. 51. He first gets pardon for himself, and then makes request for Sion.

Verse 28. For the law maketh] As if the Apostle should say, Shall I sum up, and shut up all in a word? The Law maketh men high-Priests which have infirmity, &c. Dull scholars must have it over and over. Nunquam satis dicitur, quod nunquam satis discitur. Seneca.

Chap. VIII.

Verse 1. Who is set on the right-hand]

λειτουργός. Verse 2. A Minister of the sanctuary] Or, A publike officer, an Agent for the Saints, about holy things.

Which the Lord pitched] Christs body was conceived in the Virgins womb, not by humane generation, but by divine operation. See Chap. 9.11. *Ioh.*1.14. He was the stone cut out of the mountains without hands, Dan. 2. The rose of Sharon that grows without mans care. Cant. 2. 1.

Verse 3. Somewhat also to offer] To wit, His own body, An offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour, Ephes. 5. 2. By Mount Olivet stood the garden of Gethsemane, where Christ was taken and led into the City through the Sheep-gate to be offered up like an innocent sheep, on the altar of his cross, for the sins of his people.

Verse 4. He should not be a Priest] Because not of the Tribe of Levi, whose Priesthood lasted so long as Christ lived on earth, and was done away by his death.

Verse 5. Of heavenly things] So he calleth the mysterie of Christ, shewed hereby to Moses in the Mount, and shadowed out to the people by the services of the Tabernacle. All which were Christ in figure: the ceremonial law was their Gospel; Indeed then all was in riddles, Moses was veiled, and that saying was verified, Et latet & lucet.

Verse 6. Of a better covenant] Or rather Testament (διαθήκη and not συνθήκη) heaven being conveyed to the elect by legacy. It is part of Gods testament to write his laws in our hearts, &c. All that he requires of us, is to take hold of his Covenant, to receive his gift of righteousness, to take all Christ, &c. and this also he hath promised to cause us to do, ver. 10. Isa. 56. Rom. 5.

Verse 7. Had been faultless] Such as had not been weak and unprofitable, *Chap.*7.18.

See the Note there. If the people could have performed it, and have been perfected by it. If it could have conveyed grace, as verſ. 10. The Law may chain up the Wolf, the Goſpel only changeth him: the one ſtops the ſtream, the other heals the fountain; the one reſtrains the practice, the other renews the principles. God therefore gave the law after the promiſe, Gal. 3. 19. to advance the promiſe.

Verſe 8. For finding fault with them] Or, Finding fault with it, that is, with the Covenant; he ſaith to them, Behold the days &c. So Iunius readeth and ſenſeth it.

Verſe 9. The Covenant that I made] He meaneth not here the Covenant of grace made with Abraham, but circumciſion, the legal ceremonies and ſervices, that burden which neither they nor their fathers could bear.

When I took them by the hand] Teaching them to go, taking them by the arms, Hoſ. 11. 3. keeping their feet, 1 Sam. 2. 9. and leading them through the deep, as a horſe in the wilderneſs, that they ſhould not ſtumble, Iſa. 63. 13.

And I regarded them not] Heb. Although I was an husband unto them, q. d. Yet nevertheleſs they forſook the guide of their youth, and forgat the Covenant of their God, Ier. 31. 32. Prov. 2. 17. Therefore God regarded them not, or cared not for them, as the Greek hath it. If you forſake him, he will forſake you, 2 Chron. 15. ἠμέλησα.

Verſe 10. I will put my Laws, &c.] Gods Covenant is to write his laws and promiſes in his peoples minds, ſo that they ſhall have the knowledge of them; And in their hearts, ſo that they ſhall have the comfort, feeling and fruition of them.

Verſe 11. And they ſhall not teach] The full performance of this promiſe is reſerved to the life to come; when we ſhall need no ordinances, but ſhall be all taught of God.

For all ſhall know me] Not apprehenſively only, but affectively, and with a knowledge of acquaintance, as the Church thought ſhe ſhould know him amidſt all his auſterities, Iſaiah 63. 16 Art not thou our father?

Verſe 12. I will be merciful] I will be propitious through Chriſt the propitiation for our ſins, 1 Iohn 2. 2.

To their unrighteouſneſs, and their ſins and iniquities] All kinds and degrees of ſins, Exod. 34. 5. Mic. 7. 17. All ſins and blaſphemies ſhall be forgiven to the ſons of men, Mat. 12. 31. I was a blaſphemer, ſaith Paul, (that was a grievous ſin againſt the firſt Table) I was a perſecutor (that was a great ſin againſt the ſecond Table) yet I obtained mercy, why then ſhould any one deſpair?

Will I remember no more] Nihil obliviſci ſolet prater injurias, ſaid Cicero of Cæſar. He was wont to forget nothing but ſhrewd turns. And of our Henry the ſixth it is ſtoried, that he was of that happy memory, that he never forgat any thing but injury. Let us but remember our ſins with grief, and God will forget them: Let us ſee them to confeſſion, and we ſhall never ſee them to our confuſion. He is a forgiving God, Neh. 9. 31. None like him for that, Micah 7. 18. He doth it naturally, Exod. 4. 36. Abundantly, Iſa. 55. 7. Conſtantly, Pſal. 130. 4. John 1. 27. Mal. 3. 6. Daniel contin. by Truſſel.

Verſe 13. He hath made the firſt old] He hath antiquated and aboliſhed it. This the Apoſtle often inculcates, becauſe the Jews went about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, and it is a piece of popery natural to us all, to think to go to heaven by our good meanings and good doings.

Is ready to vaniſh away] So is the old man in Gods people: that's their comfort.

Chap. IX.

Verſe 1. Then verily the firſt Covenant]

doth the holy Ghoſt renew the ſpirit of our minds, and then our wils and affections, and then the outward man.

Verſe 3. And after the ſecond veil] This was not of any hard debarring matter, but eaſily penetrable then, and now alſo rent by Chriſt, to ſhew our eaſie acceſs to God with confidence by the faith of him, Eph. 3. 11.

Verſe 4. The golden Cenſer] Or the Altar of incenſe, which though it belonged to the moſt holy place, yet was placed without the veil, Exod. 30. 6, &c. that it might be of daily uſe, the ſweet incenſe offered thereon, eaſily peircing through the veil, and filling the moſt holy with it's ſavour.

Wherein was the golden pot, &c.] In, or near to the Ark of the Covenant was this golden pot of Manna, and Aarons rod, and the Tables of the Teſtament, and the propitiatory or covering, and a crown of gold round about it. To inſinuate thus much (ſaith one) that we muſt be like the Ark of the Covenant, being builded and reared up ſtill toward the mark: not only when the Lord feedeth us with the ſweet Manna of his mercy, but alſo when he afflicteth us with the ſharp rod of his correction: and always keep the Tables of the Teſtament, which are the Commandments; that by faith in Chriſt, who is the propitiation for our ſins, we may obtain the golden crown of eternal life.

And the table of the Covenant] It may here be objected, that 1 Kings 8. 9. and 2 Chron. 5. 10. It is ſaid there was nothing in the Ark, ſave the two Tables of ſtone. For anſwer, ἐν ᾗ, In which, relates not to Ark, but Tabernacle: ſo Junius obſerveth and reconcileth. Calvin and Pareus give other anſwers. Videſis. Their conceit is not to be miſliked, that ſay, The Ark is the Church, the Tables the Word, the Manna the Sacraments, and the Rod the Diſcipline.

Verſe 5. And over it the Cherubims] The Ark covering the Law within it, the Mercy-ſeat upon it, and over them two Cherubims covering one another; All theſe ſet forth Chriſt covering the curſes of the Law, in whom is the ground of all mercy; which things the Angels deſire to pry into, as into the pattern of Gods unſearchable wiſdom and goodneſs.

κατεσκευασμένα. Verſe 6. Were thus ordained] Gr. Prepared, fitted, finiſhed by the hand of the artificer, and therefore called worldly in a good ſenſe, ver. 1.

Ἀγνοήματα. Verſe 7. For the errours] Gr. The not knowings of the people; Thoſe errours that they could not help, and yet muſt elſe have anſwered for, Ignorat ſane improbus omnis, ſaith Ariſtotle. Ignorance is the ſource of all ſin, the very well-ſpring from which all wickedneſs doth wooze and iſſue. What will not an ignorant man do, who knows not but he may do any thing? The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty, Pſal. 74. 12. Chriſt therefore expiated the ignorances of his people.

Verſe 8. The Way into the holieſt] That is, into heaven, typified thereby.

Was not yet made manifeſt] In regard of performance, and that evidence of faith and doctrine that is held forth under the Goſpel. The myſterie of Chriſt was manifeſted piece-meal, and parcel-wiſe, Heb. 1. 1.

παραβολή. Verſe 9. Which was a figure] Gr. A Parable, that is, ſuch a form of ſervice as intimated ſome greater matter then to the ſenſe appeared; and called upon the people to look through the type to the truth of things, through the hiſtory, to the myſterie.

Verſe 10. And carnal Ordinances] Such as carnal men might eaſily perform, and as were very ſuitable to the diſpoſition of a carnal heart. Hence Ezek. 20. 25. they are called commandments that were not good, becauſe they commanded neither vertue nor vices in themſelves: and ill people reſted in the outward acts.

Till the time of reformation] Gr. Of direction or correction, that is, Evangelical and ſpiritual worſhip, that ſhall take place in the Church, till the times of the reſtitution of all things ſhall come at the laſt day, Acts 3. 21.

Verſe 11. Of good things to come] i. e. Of ſpirituals that were expected as things to come, when Chriſt came with a Cornucopia, a horn of ſalvation in his hand. The Latines call proſperous things, Res ſecundas, things to come.

A more perfect tabernacle] i. e. His humane nature, not made with hands, nor of this building, that is, not by the power of nature, by the ordinary courſe of generation.

Εὑρόμενος. Verſe 12. Neither by the blood of calves] As the Levitical high-Prieſt did, verſ. 7.

Having obtained] Gr. Having found. See Rom. 4. 1. The Latines alſo uſe invenire for acquirere, to finde, for to obtain. See alſo Mat. 16. 25. Chriſt overcame by ſuffering, ſuffering, and by his own blood purchaſed his Church, as an Acheldama, or field of blood.

Verſe 13. The aſhes of an heifer] Gr. Aſhes and cinders mixt together, as a monument of Chriſts moſt baſe and utmoſt afflictions; and of our juſtification and ſanctification thorow faith in his name. σποδὸς ς. Sordidus cinis, & ea carbones extincti permiſti ſunt.

Sprinkling the unclean] With an hyſop-bunch: to note, That none can have comfort either by the merit or ſpirit of Chriſt, without true mortification.

Verſe 14. By the eternal ſpirit] That is, By his deity, called the Spirit of holineſs, Rom. 1. 4. and the Spirit, 1 Tim. 3. 16. that gave both value and vertue to his death, both to ſatisfie, and to ſanctifie.

Purge your conſcience] This is that eternal redemption, verſe 12.

From dead works] The moſt ſpecious performances of unregenerate perſons are but dead works; becauſe they proceed not from a principle of life, and have death for their wages, Rom. 6. A will written with a dead mans hand can hold no law. God will be ſerved like himſelf.

Verſe 15. For the redemption] Here he ſheweth the reaſons why it was needful that Chriſt ſhould enter by his own blood, verſe 2. ſcil. to expiate our ſins, and to poſſeſs us of heaven.

Verſe 16. For where a Teſtament is] See the Note on Chap. 8 6. Here the teſtatour is Chriſt; heirs the Saints; legacies the gifts of the Spirit; Executour the holy Ghoſt; witneſſes Apoſtles, Martyrs, &c.

Verſe 17. Whiles the Teſtatour liveth] For it is in his power to alter it at his pleaſure, as reaſon requireth. Our Henry the ſecond firſt crowned, and then caſt off his eldeſt ſon Henry, not ſuffering him to be what himſelf had made him.

Verſe 18. Was dedicated] Or initiated to holy uſe, Levit. 16. 15, 16. ἐγκεκαίνισται.

Verſe 19. He took the blood] See Exod. 24. 8.

And ſprinkled both the book] Which as it ſeemeth, was laid on the Altar to be ſanctified thereby. The very book of God is ſprinkled with the blood of Chriſt, that it may be opened, and of uſe to the faithful.

Verſe 20. Saying this is the blood, &c.] A tropical and ſacramental expreſſion, whereunto our Saviour ſeemeth to allude in thoſe words of his, This Cup is the new teſtament in my blood, &c. The Sacraments of the old Teſtament had a reſemblance unto the New: but that was for works of the Law, this is for remiſſion of ſins.

Verſe 21. He ſprinkled with blood] This ſprinkling had a fore-ſhadowing of the ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. 2. Iſa. 52. 15. by his finger, that is, by his Spirit, Luke 11. 20. with Mat. 12. 28.

Verſe 22. Purged with blood] Which yet of it ſelf impureth and fouleth.

Verſe 23. But the heavenly things] Thoſe ſpiritual good things ſet forth by the types of the Law; Or the Church under the Goſpel, called Jeruſalem that is above, &c.

Verſe 24. To appear in the preſence] As a Lawyer appears for his client, opens the cauſe, pleads the cauſe, and it is carried. ἐμφανισθῆναι.

Verſe 25. Not that he ſhould offer] As Popiſh Maſſe-mongers will have it. Eamus ad communem errorem (ſaid Domitius Calderinus to his friends, when they perſwaded him to go to Maſs, Anno Domini 1442.) Let us go to the common errour.

Verſe 26. To put away ſin] To abrogate it, Heb. 1. 18. to bind it in a bundle, ſeal it up in a bag, Dan. 9. 24. caſt it behinde him as cancelled obligations, Mic. 7. blot out the black hand-writing, with the red lines of his blood drawn over it.

Verſe 27. It is appointed] Gr. It lieth as a mans lot. Statſua cuique dies. Our laſt day ſtands, the reſt run. The Jews at this day pray (ſuch is their blindneſs) for the dead, that that bodily death may ſerve as an expiation of all his ſins. ἀπόκειται. Leo Moden. Rites of Jews.

But after this the judgement] Every mans death's day is his doomſday. Many of the Fathers held that mens ſouls were not judged till the laſt day. Which opinion is as contrary to Purgatory (for which Bellarmine alledgeth it) as the truth.

Verſe 28. The ſecond time without ſin] Imputed to him, as Iſa. 53. 6. 2 Cor. 5. 21. See the Note there.

Chap. X.

Verſe 1. A ſhadow of good things, &c.]

That is, of Chriſt, ſaith one. When the Sun is behind, the ſhadow is before; when the Sun is before, the ſhadow is behind. So was it in Chriſt to them of old. This Sun was behind, and therefore the Law or ſhadow was before; To us under grace the Sun is before, and ſo now the Ceremonies of the Law, theſe ſhadows are behind, yea vaniſhed away.

Verſe 2. No more conſcience of ſin] Chriſt, though he took not away death, yet he did the ſting of death; ſo though he took not away ſin, yet he did the guilt of ſin.

Verſe 3. Made of ſins every year] A ſolemn confeſſion of them, and what great need they had of a Saviour to expiate them; laying their hands on the head of the ſacrifice, in token that they had in like ſort deſerved to be deſtroyed.

Verſe 4. Should take away ſins] And ſo pacifie conſcience: For ſin is to the conſcience as a mote to the eye, as a dagger to the heart, 2 Sam. 24. 10. as an adders ſting to the fleſh, Prov. 23. 32.

καταρτίσω. Verſe 5. But a body haſt thou prepared] A Metaphor from Mechanicks, who do artificially fit one part of their work to another, and ſo finiſh the whole: God fitted his Sons body to be joyned with the Deity, and to be an expiatory ſacrifice for ſin.

Verſe 6. Thou haſt had no pleaſure] viz. As in the principal ſervice and ſatisfaction for ſin.

Verſe 7. Lo I come] As an obedient ſervant bored through the ear, Exod. 21. with Pſal. 40. 6, 7. wiſe and willing to be obſequious. Servus eſt nomen officii, A ſervant is the maſters inſtrument, and ὅλως ἐκείνου, ſaith Ariſtotle, wholly at his beck and obedience.

It is written of me] Chriſt is author, object, matter and mark of old and new Teſtament. Therefore if we will profit thereby, we muſt have the eyes of our minds turned toward Chriſt, as the faces of the Cherubims were toward the Mercy-ſeat.

Verſe 8. Which are offered by the Law] To the great coſt and charge of the offerers. This we are freed from, and are required no more then to cover Gods altar with the calves of our lips.

Verſe 9. Lo I come] True obedience is prompt and preſent, ready and ſpeedy, without ſhucking and hucking, without delays and conſults, Pſal. 119. 60.

He taketh away the firſt] Clear conſequences drawn from Scripture, are ſound doctrine, Mat. 22. 32. See the Note there.

Verſe 10. By the which will] That is, by the execution of which will, by the obedience of Chriſt to his heavenly Father.

περιελεῖν. Undiq; tollere. Verſe 11. Take away ſin] Separando auferre, ſunder it from the ſoul, ſtrike a parting blow betwixt them.

Verſe 12. But this man] Oppoſed to the plurality of Levitical Prieſts. One ſacrifice, and once for ever, not many and often, as they. And he ſate down, when as they ſtood daily offering oftentimes. Note the Antitheſis, and Chriſts precellency.

On the right hand of God] Which he could not have done, if he had not expiated our ſins, John 16. 10. Of righteouſneſs, becauſe I go to my Father. He could not have gone to his Father, if he had not firſt fulfilled all righteouſneſs, and fully acquitted us of all our iniquities.

Rom. 16. 20. Verſe 13. Expecting till his enemies] Admire and imitate his patience. The God of peace ſhall tread Satan and the reſt under our feet ſhortly.

Verſe 14. He hath perfected] He would not off the croſs till all was finiſhed.

μεμαρτύρηκε. Verſe 15. The holy Ghoſt alſo witneſſeth] viz. By inſpiring the Pen-men, 2 Tim. 3. 16. acting and carrying them into all truth, 2 Timothy 1. 21. as it were by an holy violence.

Verſe 16. I will put my laws] See the Note on Heb. 8. 10.

Verſe 17. Will I remember no more] Therefore there needs not any repetition of a ſacrifice for ſin in the New Teſtament.

Verſe

Verſe 18. When remiſſion of ſin is] viz. An Impletory remiſſion, as now in the New Teſtament, not a promiſſory as under the old.

Verſe 19. To enter into the holieſt] viz. By our prayers, which pierce heaven and prevail with God.

Verſe 20. By a new] Freſh, and as effectual at all times, as if Chriſt were but newly ſacrificed for us. Tam recens mihi nunc Chriſtus eſt, ac ſi hac hora ſudiſſet ſanguinem, ſaith Luther. Chriſt is even now as freſh to me, as if this very hour he had ſhed his precious blood. προσφατον. Recens mactatus.

Which he hath conſecrated, or new made for us] Paradiſe had a way out, but none that ever we could find in again. Heaven hath now a way in (ſc. this new and living, or life-giving way, a milky way to us, a bloody way to Chriſt) but no way out again.

Through the veyl, that is, his fleſh] Whereby we come to God, dwelling bodily therein. Like as where I ſee the body of a man, there I know his ſoul is alſo, becauſe they are not ſevered: ſo is it here. The veil or curtain in the Sanctuary did hide the glory of the Holy of Holies: and withal miniſtred an entrance into it for the High-prieſt.

Verſe 21. Over the houſe of God] As Jehojadah was over the temple, preſided and commanded there, 2 Kings 11. 5. All power is given to Chriſt both in heaven and earth, for our behoof and benefit.

Verſe 22. Let us draw near] Come, for the Maſter calleth, (Mark 10. 49.

With a true heart] That is, With a heart truly and entirely given up to God, uprightly propounding Gods ſervice in prayer, and that out of a filial affection, delighting to do his will, and therefore well content to wait, or, if God ſee good, to want what it wiſheth, deſirous rather that Gods will be done then our own, and that he may be glorified, though we be not gratified; acknowledging the kingdom, power and glory to be his alone. This is a true heart.

In full aſſurance of faith] Not with a quarter or half-winde, but with full aſſurance, ſuch a gale of faith as fils the ſails of the ſoul, and makes it ſet up its top-gallant as it were. πληροφορία.

Having our hearts ſprinkled, &c.] Faith ever purgeth from ſin, and worketh repentance from dead works.

Verſe 23. Without wavering] Gr. Without tilting or toſſing to one ſide or other. This amounts to more then that conjectural confidence of the Popiſh dubitanti, and that common faith that holds men in ſuſpence, and hangs between heaven and earth as a Meteor. Ανλιτη.

Verſe 24. And let us conſider] Chriſtians muſt ſtudy one anothers caſes, the cauſes and cure of their ſpiritual diſtempers, ſollicitous of their welfare.

To provoke unto love] To whet on, as Deut. 6. 7. to ſharpen and extimulate, as Prov. 27. 17. to rouſe and raiſe up their dull ſpirits, as 2 Pet. 2. 13. to ſet an edge on one another, as Bores whet their tusks one againſt another, ſaith Nazianzen. ὡς ὑων ὀδόντας ἀλλήλους θήξαντες.

Verſe 25. Not forſaking] Schiſm is the very cutting aſunder of the very veins and arteries of the myſtical body of Chriſt. We may not ſeparate, but in caſe of intolerable perſecution, hereſie, idolatry, and Antichriſtianiſm.

The aſſembling of our ſelves together] In Church-aſſemblies and Chriſtian meetings, as ever we look for comfort at the comming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and our gathering together, (the ſame word, as here) unto him, 2 Theſſ. 2. 1. the day whereof approacheth, as in this text. Chriſt will come ſhortly to ſee what work we make in this kinde. ἐπισυναγωγὴ.

As the manner of ſome is] It was then, it was afterwards, and is ſtill in theſe ſiding and ſeparating times. The Donatiſts made an horrible rent for the life of Cecilian. So did divers other for the pride and profaneſs of Paulus Samoſatenus. But never was there any ſchiſm ſo cauſleſs and ſenſleſs, as that of our modern Sectaries.

Verſe 26. For if we ſin wilfully] Againſt the grace of the Goſpel, deſpiſing and deſpiting it, as thoſe that fall into the unpardonable ſin. Some good ſouls by miſtakes of this text have been much afflicted, as Maſter John Glover. Other odious Apoſtates have utterly deſpaired. Others of the Anciens have unworthily caſhiered this Epiſtle out of the Canon, becauſe of this paſſage.

There remaineth no more ſacrifice] For ſins againſt the law, though againſt knowledge, there was an atonement, Lev. 6. 1. though it were for perjury; but for this ſin againſt the Goſpel, that repudiates the remedy, theres no ſacrifice; abuſed mercy turns into fury.

Verſe 27. Fearful looking for] Though judgement be not ſpeedily executed, yet it is certainly to be expected. Winter never rots in the air, or dies in the the dams-belly, as they ſay. Could but men fore-ſee what an evil, and a bitter thing ſin is, they durſt not but be innocent.

Verſe 28. He that deſpiſed] i. e. He that with a high hand violated it, or fell into any capital crime, and it came to light, died without mercy. As for thoſe hainous offences, that not being diſcovered, and ſufficiently proved, came not under the Judges cognizance, the Lord, for the eaſing of mens conſciences, and for the ſaving of their lives, appointed the yearly feaſt of expiations, Levit. 16. 29.

Verſe 29. Who hath trodden under foot] Reſpecting him no more then the vileſt and filthieſt dirt in the ſtreet, or the moſt abject thing in the world, as Ambroſe expounds it: he diſdains to receive benefit by Chriſts propitiatory and expiatory ſacrifice, he would not if he might, he is ſo ſatanized. King Henry the ſixth, going againſt Richard Duke of York (that ambitious rebel) offered them a general pardon. This was rejected by them, and called A ſtaff of reed, or Glaſs-buckler. In Kets conſpiracy, when King Edward the ſixth his pardon was offered to the Rebels by an Herald, a lewd boy turned toward him his naked Poſteriours, and uſed words ſuitable to that geſture. Deſperate Apoſtates deal as coarſly with Chriſt: they hold him for a ſcorn as an offendour, that is carted, Heb. 6. 6.

Sir I. Heyw.

The blood of the Covenant] That is, The blood of Chriſt, whereby the Covenant is ſealed, the Church purchaſed, the atonement procured, and heaven opened for our more happy entrance.

Wherewith he was ſanctified] By external profeſſion, and by participation of the Sacraments.

An unholy thing] Gr. A common profane thing, as if it were the blood of a common thief, or unhallowed perſon, yea, or of a dead dog. In the Paſſeover they ſprinkled the door and lintel with blood, but not the threſhold, to teach them, that they muſt not tread upon the blood of Jeſus, as they do in an high degree that ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt.

And hath done deſpite, &c.] Spitting at him their helliſh venome, perſecuting and blaſpheming his immediate effect, work and office; and this out of deſperate malice, and deſire of revenge, without any colour of cauſe, or meaſure of diſlike. One that had committed this ſin, wiſhed that his wife and children, and all the world might be damned together with him.

Verſe 30. I will recompence] And if God will avenge his elect, Luke 18. 7. How much more his Son, and his Spirit?

Verſe 31. It is a fearful thing] For who knoweth the power of his anger? even according to thy fear is thy wrath, Pſal. 90. 11. A melancholy man can fancy vaſt and terrible fears, fire, ſword, racks, ſtrappadoes, ſcalding lead, boiling pitch, running bell-mettle, and this to all eternity: yet all theſe are nothing to that wrath of God which none can either avoid or abide.

Verſe 32. But call to remembrance] q. d. You cannot utterly fall away, as thoſe above-mentioned: for as much as you have given good proof already of the reality of your graces.

After ye were illuminated] Till they had a ſight of heaven they could not ſuffer; but no ſooner out of the water of baptiſm, but they were preſently in the fire of perſecution.

Θεατριζόμενοι Verſe 33. Made a gazing ſtock] Gr. Set upon a theatre: take it either properly, or Metaphorically, both befel Chriſtians. See 1 Cor. 4. 9.

D. Sibbs. Ye became companions of them] Sympathy hath a ſtrange force; as we ſee in the ſtrings of an inſtrument; which being plaid upon (as they ſay) the ſtrings of another inſtrument are alſo moved with it. After love hath once kindled love, then the heart being melted is fit to receive any impreſſion. Two ſpirits warmed with the ſame heat, will eaſily ſolder together.

Verſe 34. For ye had compaſſion] Gr. Ye ſympathized. See the Note on ver. 33.

And took joyfully] The joy of the Lord was their ſtrength, as it was theirs, Acts 5. 41. who took it for a grace to be diſgraced for Chriſt.

The ſpoiling of their goods] If a Heathen could ſay when he ſaw a ſudden ſhipwrack of all his wealth, Well, fortune, I ſee thou wouldſt not have me to be a Philoſopher; ſhould ſhould not we, when called to quit our moveables ſay, Well, I ſee that God would have me to lay up treaſure in heaven that is ſubject neither to vanity, nor violence?

Digitized by Google

Knowing in your ſelves] Not in others, in books, &c. but in your own experience and apprehenſion in the workings of your own hearts.

That ye have in heaven] When we loſe any thing for God, he ſeals us a bill of exchange of better things, or a double return. He will recompence our loſſes, as the King of Poland did his noble ſervant Zeliſlaus; having loſt his hand in his wars, he ſent him a golden hand. Theſe Hebrews had loſt their goods, but not their God. Here is the dry rod bloſſoming.

Verſe 35. Caſt not away your confidence] Sith it is your ſhield and buckler, Eph. 6 16. but if battered with temptations, beat it out again. Demoſthenes was branded with the name of Ριψασπις, One that had loſt his buckler.

Verſe 36. For ye have need of patience] Whereas they might object: But where is this recompence you tell us of? Oh, ſaith he, You have need of patience to wait Gods time of recompence. Good men find it oft more eaſie to bear evil, then to wait till the promiſed good be enjoyed. The ſpoiling of their goods required patience, but this more then ordinary.

That after ye have done the will of God] viz. By ſuffering it, and long-ſuffering, till he reward it.

Verſe 37. For yet a little while] Tantillùm, tantillum, ad hùc puſillum. A little, little, little while. Gods help ſeems long, becauſe we are ſhort. Were we but ripe, he is full ready. Hence this ingemination, he that ſhall come, will come, &c. q. d. he will, he will, his mind is always upon it, he is ſtill a comming to deliver. With this ſweet promiſe Reverend Mr. Whately comforted himſelf a little before his death. And B. Jnel perſwading many to patience, oft ſaid, hac non durabunt ætatem this is but for awhile. Επιαειμικρὸν ὅσον, ὅσον. M. Leighs Annotat.

Now the juſt ſhall live by faith] In the want of feeling: he ſhall reſt upon God in the fail of outward comforts, as the believing Jews were to do in the Babyloniſh captivity, Hab. 2. 4. quoted here by the Apoſtle, though with ſome variation of words.

But if any man draw back] Gr. Steal from his colours, run from his captain, revolt from Chriſt, turn Renegado, relinquiſhing his religion, as did Julian, Lucian, and other odious Apoſtates. ὑποστείληται.

My ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure] Chriſt hath no delights in daſtards, turn-coats, run-aways, he will not employ them ſo far as to break a pitcher, or bear a torch, Judg. 7. 7. Baldwin the French Lawyer, that had religionem ephemeram, as Beza ſaith of him, for every day a new religion, being conſtant to none, became Deo hominibusq; quos toties fefellerat inviſus, Hated of God and men, whom he had ſo oft mocked. Theodorick an Arrian King, did exceedingly affect a certain Deacon, although an Orthodox. This Deacon thinking to ingratiate, and get preferment, became an Arrian. Which when the King underſtood, he changed his love into hatred, and cauſed the head to be ſtruck from him, affirming that if he kept not his faith to God, what duty could any one expect from him? Melch. Adam.

Verſe 38. Who draw back unto] Apoſtates have Martial law, they run away, but into hell mouth. A worſe condition they cannot likely chuſe unto themſelves. For they are miſerable by their own election, Jon. 2. 8 and are wholly deſtined to utter deſtruction. Tranſfugas arboribus ſuſpendunt, ſaith Tacitus of the old Germans; they hang up runawayes. And tranſfugas, ubicunq; inventi fuerint, quaſi hoſtes interficere licet, ſaith the Civil law. Runaways are to be received as enemies, and to be killed whereever they be found.

To the ſaving of the ſoul] Gr. To the giving of the ſoul. A Metaphor from merchants, who either get more or loſe what they have: or elſe haply from gameſters who keep a ſtake in ſtore, however the world go with them. εἰς περιποίησιν ψυχῆς.

Chap. XI.

Verſe 1. Now faith is the ſubſtance]

1 Pet. 1. 9. HAving mentioned the life of faith, Chap. 10. 38. and the end of faith (or the reward of it) the ſalvation of the ſoul, verſe 39. he now deſcends to the deſcription of this glorious grace, (James 2. 1.) and faith, that it is the ſubſtance or ſubſiſtence or Baſis, and foundation of things hoped for. It is the ſame that our author had called confidence, chap. 10. 35. Polybius ſpeaking of Horatius his keeping the field againſt the enemies forces ſaith, that the enemies more feared his hypoſtaſis (the word here uſed) his confident binding upon the victory, then his ſtrength. Faith is the vital Artery of the ſoul (ſaith One) Hab. 2. 4. and by the eye of it, thorough the perſpective glaſs of the promiſes, a Chriſtian may ſee into heaven. Faith doth antidate glory: it doth ſubſtantiate things not ſeen. Faith altereth the tenſes, and putteth the future into the preſent tenſe, Pſal. 60. 6. It is reported of the Chryſtal that the very touching of it quickneth other ſtones and puts a luſtre and beauty upon them. This is true of faith; it makes evil things preſent, far off; and good things far off preſent.

ὑπόστασις. Gul. Pariſienſ.

The evidence of things, &c.] The Index or the clear conviction by diſputation, or by making ſyllogiſms from the word. Indeed it is the word (to ſpeak properly) that is the convincing evidence of things not ſeen; but becauſe the word profiteth not further then it is mingled with faith in the heart, therefore that which is due to the word, is here aſcribed to faith.

Verſe 2. The elders obtained, &c.] Gr. Were atteſted unto: and are here eternalized in this notable Chapter, This little book of Martyrs, as one fitly calleth it. Faith honoureth God, and gives him a teſtimonial, Joh. 3. 33. ſuch as is that Deut. 32. 4. God therefore honoureth faith, according to 1 Sam. 2. 30. and gives it his teſtimonial as here. In this truly named golden Legend.

Verſe 3. Thorough faith we underſtand] It is the nature of faith to believe God upon his bare word, and that againſt ſenſe in things inviſible, and againſt reaſon in things incredible. Senſe corrects imagination, reaſon corrects ſenſe, but faith corrects both. Aufer argumenta ubi fides quæritur. Verba philoſophorum excludit ſimplex veritas Piſcatorum, ſaith Ambroſe. I believe, and that's enough, though I cannot prove principles and fundamentals of faith.

That the worlds were framed] Gr. Were neatly made up.

κατηρτίσθαι. Affabre facta.

By the word of God] By that one word of his Fiat, let it be ſo and ſo. By the way take notice, that faith here deſcribed is taken in a large ſenſe, as it hath not the promiſes only, but the whole Word of God for it's object. Look how the Iſraelites with the ſame eyes and viſive faculty wherewith they beheld the ſands and mountains, did look upon the brazen ſerpent alſo, but were cured by faſtening upon that alone: ſo by the ſame faith whereby we are juſtified, we underſtand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, and believe all other truths revealed; and yet faith as it juſtifieth looks upon Chriſt alone, not knowing any thing here, but Chriſt, and him crucified, as is well obſerved by a learned Divine.

Were not made of things, &c.] Of any præexiſtent matter, as Plato held. See my Notes on Gen. 1. 1.

Ver. 4. A more excellent ſacrifice] Good actions and good aims, make a man good in the ſight of God. Cain may offer as well as Abel. Doeg may ſet his foot as far within the Sanctuary as David, the Phariſee as the Publican, but with different ſucceſs.

God teſtifying of his gifts] By fire from heaven, or ſome other viſible expreſſion of his gracious acceptation, whereby Abels faith was confirmed touching life and ſalvation in Chriſt. Paulus Phagius tels us out of the Rabbines, that a face of a Lion was ſeen in the heavenly fire inflaming the Sacrifice. Which (if it be true) did probably ſhadow out the Lion of the tribe of Judah, of whom all the ſacrifices were Types.

Annot in Chal. Paraphr.

Being dead yet ſpeaketh] Or, is yet ſpoken of; Being regiſtred for the firſt Martyr in the Old Teſtament, as Stephen was in the New, and as Mr. Rogers was here in the Marian perſecution.

Verſe 5. By faith Enoch was tranſlated] Or carried from one place to another. He changed his place, but not his company, for he ſtill walked with God, as in earth, ſo in heaven.

That he ſhould not ſee death] The Arabick verſion addeth, He was tranſlated into Paradiſe, where a plentiful amends was made him for that which he wanted of the daies of the years of the lives of his fathers, in the daies of their pilgrimage, Gen. 47. 9.

And was not found] And yet the Lord killed him not, as the Chaldee hath, Gen. 5. 24. but took him up in a whirlwind, ſay the Hebrew Doctours, as Elias was. He was changed as thoſe ſhall be that are found alive at Chriſts ſecond coming, 1 Cor. 15. 51. the ſoul and body being ſeparated, and in a moment reunited. Subitus erit tranſitus à natura corruptibili in beatam immortalitatem, ſaith Calvin there.

That he pleaſed God] He walked with God in all well pleaſing, being fruitful in every good work, Col. 1. 10. Hence that teſtimony given him by his own conſcience, that he gave God good content. εὐηρεστηκέναι.

Verſe 6. But without faith] That is, without Chriſt, in whom the Father is well-pleaſed, Joh. 14. 6.

For he that cometh to God] ſc. Formâ pauperis, that cometh a begging to him in the ſenſe of his own utter indigence, as Jacobs ſons came to Joſeph, and as the Ægyptians hard-beſtead came to him, ſaying, We will not hide it from my Lord, how that our money is ſpent, &c. Gen. 47.

Muſt believe that he is] Zaleucus Law-giver of the Locrians, ſpeaketh thus in the proem to his Laws, Hoc inculcatum ſit, eſſe Deos, Let this be well ſetled in mens minds, that there is a Deity, and that this Deity will reward the devout. But what an odd conceit was that of the Cretians, to paint their Jupiter without either eyes or ears? And what an uncertainty was ſhe at, that prayed, O Deus quiſquis es, vel in cœlo, vel in terrâ, O God whoever thou art, for whether thou art, and who thou art, I know not. This uncertainty attending Idolatry cauſed the Heathens to cloſe up their petitions with that general Diiq; Deaq; omnes; Hear all ye gods and goddeſſes. And thoſe mariners, Jon. 1. 5. every man to call upon his God; and leſt they might all miſtake the true God, they awaken Jonah to call upon his God. Chriſtian petitioners muſt ſettle this, that their God is Optimus, Maximus, ſuch in himſelf, and ſuch toward them, as he ſtands deſcribed in his holy word. Medea. Servius in Geor. lib. 1.

Verſe 7. Moved with fear] Oppoſed to the ſecurity of the old world, who would know nothing till the very day that the flood came, Mat. 24. Noah trembled at Gods judgements, whileſt they hanged in the threatnings; and was no leſs affected then if himſelf had been endangered. See the like in Habakkuk, after that he threatned the Chaldeans, Cap. 3. 16. and in Daniel, chap. 4. 19. Noah took things fore-told him by God, by the right handle, as the word properly ſignifieth. εὐλαβηθεὶς.

By the which he condemned the world] Of deep and deſperate ſecurity, that dead lethargy, whereinto ſin and Satan had caſt them. Their heathen-poſterity in ſcorn termed him Prometheus; and fained him to be chained to Caucaſus with a vulture feeding upon his entrailes, in regard of his foretelling the flood, and providing an Ark to eſcape it, near the mountain Caucaſus.

And became heir] Heir apparant: he was hereby evidently declared to be ſuch.

Verſe 8. When he was called] A man may follow God dry ſhod thorow the red ſea. He is to be obeyed without ſciſcitation, with a blind obedience. Abraham winked, as it were, and put his hand into Gods, to be led whitherſoever he pleaſed. Magnus eſt animus, qui ſe Deo tradidit: puſillus & degener qui oblu&tatur. That's a brave man indeed that can wholly reſign up himſelf to God —— Quò fata trahunt, retrahuntque, ſequamur. Seneca. Virgil.

Verſe 9. He ſojourned in the Land] There he had his commoration, but in heaven his converſation, content to dwell in tents till he ſhould fix his ſtation above.

With Iſaac and Iacob] Perhaps together, as near neighbours. When Abraham parted with Lot, he would part with him no further then the right hand is from the left, Gen. 13. 9 There is ſingular comfort in the ſociety of Saints.

Verſe 10. Which hath foundations] Heaven hath a foundation, earth hath none; but is hanged upon nothing, as Iob ſpeaketh. Hence things are ſaid to be on earth, but in heaven.

Whoſe builder and maker] Gr. Whoſe cunning artificer, and publike workman. God hath beſtowed a great deal of skill and workmanſhip upon the third heaven.

Verſe 11. Becauſe ſhe judged him, &c.] At firſt ſhe laughed, through unbelief, at the unlikeunlikelihood: but afterward ſhe bethought her ſelf, and believed. This latter is recorded, the former pardoned. So Gen. 18. 12. Sarah laughed within her ſelf, ſaying, After I have waxen old ſhall I have pleaſure, my Lord being old alſo? Here was never a good word but one, viz. that ſhe called her husband Lord, and this is recorded to her eternal commendation, 1 Pet. 3. 6. Iſaac then was not a child of nature, but of the meer promiſe, ſo are all our graces. We bring forth good things, as Sarah's dead womb brought forth a child.

Verſe 12. As the ſtars, &c.] The ſeed of Abraham (ſaith one) are of two ſorts. Some are viſible members of a Church, yet have earthly hearts, dry and barren as the Sand. Others as the ſtars of heaven, of ſpiritual hearts, minding things above.

Verſe 13. And embraced them] Gr. Saluted them, Kiſſing Chriſt in the promiſes, and interchangeably kiſſed of him, Cant. 1. 1. being drawn together (as the word ſignifies) by mutual dear affection.

Ασπαζ, ab α ſimul & σπαω traho. Plotin ap. Aug. de civ. Dei.

Verſe 14. That they ſeek a Countrey] Fugiendum eſt ad clariſſimam patriam; ibi pater, ibi omnia. Away, home to our Country, ſaith one, there's our father, there's our All, ſaith one. To dye, is in Bernards language no more then repatriaſſe, to go home again.

Verſe 15. If they had been mindful] But to that they had no mind at all, becauſe there idolatry too much prevailed, Joſhua 24. 2. Gen. 31. 19. yet not ſo much as among the Canaanites, Deut. 12. 31.

Verſe 16. God is not aſhamed] But honoureth them as his confederates, becauſe for his cauſe they renounced the world. No man ever did or ſuffered any thing for God, that complained of a hard bargain.

Verſe 17. Abraham, when he was tried] Of ten trials which Abraham paſſed, this laſt was the ſoreſt. No ſon of Abraham can look to eſcape temptations, when he ſeeth that boſome in which he deſireth to reſt, ſo aſſaulted with difficulties.

Offered up his ſon Iſaac] Ready he was ſo to have done, and therefore it is reputed and reckoned as done indeed, 2 Cor. 8. 12. See the Note there.

Verſe 18. Of whom it was ſaid] This was one of thoſe many promiſes that Abraham might think were all loſt in the loſs of his Iſaac. Never was gold tried in ſo hot a fire.

Verſe 19. That God was able] He founded his faith upon Gods fidelity and omnipotency. Theſe are the Jachin and the Boaz, the two main pillars whereupon faith reſteth.

Verſe 20. By faith Iſaac bleſſed] Patriarchal benedictions were prophetical: the bleſſing of godly parents is ſtill very available for the good of their children; and juſtifying faith is not beneath miraculous in the ſphere of its own activity, and where it hath warrant of Gods Word.

Verſe 21. When he was a dying] The ſpirits motions are then many times quickeſt, when natural motions are ſloweſt; moſt ſenſible, when the body begins to be ſenſleſs; moſt lively when the Saints lye a dying. The Sun ſhines moſt amiably toward the deſcent. The rivers, the nearer they run to the ſea, the ſooner they are met by the tide. So here.

Verſe 22. Gave commandment concerning] He died upon the promiſe, and held poſſeſſion by his bones, to teſtifie his firm hold of heaven.

Verſe 23. Hid three moneths of his parents] That they hid him no longer, argued weakneſs of their faith: which yet is both commended and rewarded.

He was a proper child] Fair to God, Acts 7. 20. having a divine beauty and comelineſs. Special endowments are a fore-token of ſpecial employment. The very Heathen in chuſing their Kings, had a ſpecial eye to bodily beauty. See 1 Sam. 10. 23. and 16. 19. & 17. 42.

Ασειον.

Not afraid of the Kings commandment] Becauſe unjuſt and impious. See the Note on Acts 4. 19.

Verſe 24. When he was come to years] Gr. Grown a great one, and ſo knew what he did, underſtood himſelf ſufficiently.

Refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaohs] And ſo to ſucceed in the kingdom (for we read not of any ſon that Pharaoh had) yea in the kingdom of Ethiopia too; for being ſent on his foſter-fathers quarrel againſt the King of Ethiopia, Hiſtories tell us, that he afterward married that Kings daughter; for the which he was checked of his brother and ſiſter. Numb. 12. 1. But he could have told them, that for denying the title of ſon of Pharaohs daughter, he was ſoon after called Pharaoh's God, Exod. 7. 1. and what he loſt lost in Ethiopia, was sufficiently made up to him when he became King in Iesburun. Howsoever, gratius ei fuit nomen pietatis quam potestatis, as Tertullian saith of Augustus, he more prized piety then power.

Verse 25. Chusing rather to suffer] The happiest choice that ever the good man made. It was a heavy charge that Elihu laid upon Iob, that he had chosen iniquity rather then affliction, Iob 36. 21. The Church is said to come from the wilderness (of troubles and miseries) leaning on her beloved, Cant. 8. 5. The good soul will not break the hedge of any Commandment, to avoid any piece of foul way. Quas non oportet mortes praeligere? saith Zuinglius. What deaths had we not better chuse, what punishment undergo, yea, what hell not suffer, rather then go against our consciences rightly informed by the good Word of God? Zuing. epist. 3.

The pleasures of sin for a season] Iob fitly calleth sparks the sons of fire, being ingendred by it upon fuel, as pleasures are by our lusts upon the object. But they are not long-lived, they are but as sparks, they die as soon as begotten, they perish with the use, Col. 2. 22. Good God, said Lysimachus, for how short pleasure, how great a Kingdom have I lost! May not the voluptuous Epicure say so much better? O what mad men are they that bereave themselves of a room in that City of pearl, for a few carnal pleasures in this land of Cabul, or of dirt, as Hiram called the Cities that Solomon had given him, 1 Kings 9. 13.

Verse 26. Esteeming the reproach, &c.] Reproach is here reckoned as the heaviest part of Christs cross. And if we can bear reproach for him, it is an argument we mean to stick to him; as the servant in the law that was content to be boared in the ear, would stick to his master.

Then the Treasures in Egypt] Egypt for its power and pride is called Rahab, Psal. 87. famous it was for its learning, 1 Kings 4. 30. Acts 7. 22. and is still for its fruitfulness; so that where Nilus overfloweth, they do but throw in the seed, and have four rich harvests in less then four moneths. Thence Solomon had his chief horses, 2 Chron. 9. and the harlot her fine linnen, Prov. 7. 16. and yet Moses upon mature deliberation, esteemed the reproach of Christ, &c. So did Origen chuse rather to be a poor Catechist in Alexandria, then, denying the faith, to be with his fellow-pupil Plotinus in great authority and favour. To profess the truth whiles we may live upon it, this argues no truth: but to profess it when it must live upon us, upon our honours, profits, pleasures, this is praise-worthy, and argues not only truth, but strength of grace, 1 Sam. 14. 26. It argued there was much power in that oath, when none dared to touch one drop of that hony; so, to resist strong temptations, argues strong grace.

For he had respect, &c.] We may safely make any of Gods arguments our encouragements; look through the cross, and see the crown beyond it, and take heart, Quis non patiatur, ut patiatur? Moses cast an eye (when he was on his journey) to chear him in his way; he stole a look from glory, he goes to his cordial, and renews his strength, gets fresh encouragement. Columbus, when his men were weary, and resolved to come back, besought them to go on but three days longer. They did so, and discovered America. Heaven is but a little afore us. Hold out faith and patience. ἀπίβλεπε.

Verse 27. As seeing him who is invisible] An elegant kinde of contradiction. Let us study Moses his Opticks, get a Patriarchs eye, see God, and set him at our right-hand, Psal. 16. This will support our courage, as it did Micaiahs; who having seen God, feared not to see two great Kings in their Majesty.

Verse 28. Through faith he kept the Passover] It is the work of faith rightly to celebrate a Sacrament. Speak therefore to thy faith at the Lords Supper, as Deborah did to her self, Awake, awake, Deborah, awake, awake, utter a song.

Verse 29. They passed through the red sea] Which threatned to swallow them, but yet preserved them. Faith will eat its way through the Alpes of seemingly-insuperable difficulties, and finde unexpected out-gates.

As by dry land] Israel saw no way to escape here, unless they could have gone up to heaven: which because they could not (saith one) heaven comes down to them, and paves them a way through the red sea.

Assaying to do, were drowned] Here that holy Proverb was exemplified, The righteous is delivered out of trouble, and the wicked cometh in his stead, Prov. 11. 8. See Isa. 43. 3. God usually infatuateth those whom he intendeth to destroy, as these.

Verse 30. By faith the Wals of Jericho] So do daily the strong-holds of hell, 2 Cor. 10. 4. See the Note there. Wherein, albeit the Lord require our continual endeavours for the subduing of our corruptions during the six days of this life, yet we shall never find it perfectly effected, till the very evening of our last day.

Verse 31. With them that believed not] To wit, that gave not credit to those common reports of God, and his great works, but despised them as light news, and refused to be at the pains of further enquiry.

When she had received the spies] Whom to secure she told a lie, which was ill done. The Apostle commends her faith in God, but not her deceit toward her neighbour, as Hugo well observeth.

Verse 32. Of Gideon, of Barac, &c.] Here the Names only of sundry Worthies of old time per præteritionem conglobantur, are artificially wound up together for brevity sake. All these were not alike eminent, and some of them such, as, but that we find them here enrolled, we should scarce have taken them for honest men; yet by faith, &c. Christ carries all his of what size or sort soever, to the haven of heaven, upon his own bottom; as a ship doth all the passengers that are therein to the desired shore.

Verse 33. Wrought righteousness] Civil and military, spiritualized by faith, and heightned to its full worth. The Scripture maketh it a great matter, that Abraham should have a child when he was an hundred years old; whereas Terah his father, was 130. when he begat Abraham. But because Abraham had his child by faith, therefore it was a great matter. And so in all things whatsoever, that we have, do, or suffer, if they be by faith, they are great things indeed.

Obtained promises] Faith winds it self into the promises, and makes benefit thereof. A Bee can suck honey out of a flower, so cannot a Fly do. Faith will extract abundance of comfort in most desperate distresses out of the precious promises, and gather one contrary out of another, honey out of the rock, &c. Deut. 32. 36.

Verse 34. Escaped the edge of the sword] As David by the force of his faith escaped Sauls sword, Eliah Ahabs, Elisha the Syrians, 2 Kings 6. &c. and divers of Gods hidden ones at this day have escaped by a strange providence, when studiously sought after as sheep to the slaughter. See the prefatory Epistle to M. Shaws Sermon.

Out of weakness were made strong] And here their strength was to sit still, as theirs was, Isa. 30. 7. They thought their strength had been in the help of Egypt; but the Prophet tels them, whatsoever strength they expect from Egypt, they shall have it here. Your Egypt is to sit still (so the words may be read) by sitting still you shall have an Egypt; whatsoever succour you might think to have that way, you shall have it this way.

Verse 35. Women received] As the Sareptan, Shunamite, widdow of Naim, &c. No such mid wife as faith; It hath delivered even graves of their dead.

ἐτυμπανίσθησαν. Others were tortured] Gr. They were tympanized, distended, stretched upon the rack, as a sheeps-pelt is upon a drum-head. Others render it. They were bastonaded or beaten with bats or cudgels, to death, as if it were with drum-sticks.

Not accepting deliverance] On base terms; they scorned to fly away for the enjoyment of any rest, except it were with the wings of a Dove, covered with silver innocency. As willing were many of the Martyrs to die as to dine. The tormentors were tired in torturing Blandina. And, we are ashamed O Emperor! The Christians laugh at your cruelty, and grow the more resolute, said one of Julians Nobles: Illud humiliter sublime & sublimiter humile, nisi in Christi Martyribus non videmus, saith Cyprian. This the Heathens counted obstinacy; but they knew not the power of the Spirit, nor the privy armor of proof that the Saints have about their hearts.

That they might obtain a better resurrection] The resurrection they knew would recruit and rectifie them. This held life and soul together. So Dan. 12. 3. These miserable Caitiffs (saith Lucian, the Atheist of the Christians of this time) have vainly perswaded themselves of a glorious resurrection, and hence their fool-hardy forwardness to die. Other of the Heathens jeared the Christians, and told them they needed not to care for their lives, since they should rise again. Will you, said they, redituræ parcere vitæ, spare your carkasses that shall rise?

Verse 36. Of cruel mockings] As Jeremy, Amos, Elisha, Go up, baldpate, Go up, &c. To heaven, as they say (but who will believe it?) that your Master Elias did. So they mewed at David, mocked at Isaiah, Chap. 28. 10. the sound of the words, as they are in the original, carries a taunt) jeared our Saviour, Luke 16. 14. Set these Hebrews upon the stage, as mocking-stocks, Chap. 10. 33.

Verse 37. Were tempted] Or (as others read the words) They were burned. One saith, That it was almost as great a miracle that Joseph did not burn, when his mistress tempted him, as it was for the three children not to burn in the Babylonish fire. Luther was oft tempted to be quiet, with great sums of money, and highest preferments. Julian by this means drew many from the faith. ἐπειράσθησαν.

In sheep-skins and goat-skins] That might have rustled in silks and velvets, if they would have yielded. Sæpe sub attrita latitat sapientia veste.

Afflicted, tormented] None out of hell were ever more afflicted then the Saints, to the wonder and astonishment of the beholders.

Verse 38. Of whom the world] They were fitter to be set as stars in heaven, and be before the Lord in his glory. The world was not worthy of their presence, and yet they were not thought worthy to live in the world.

Verse 39. Received not the promise] viz. Of Christs incarnation.

Verse 40. Some better thing] i. e. Christ that great mysterie, as 1 Tim. 3. 16. that chief of ten thousand, &c. that gift, Joh. 4. 10. that benefit, 1 Tim. 6. 2.

Chap. XII.

Verse 1. With so great a cloud]

OR, cluster of witnesses, whose depositions we should hearken to, and rest in. Justin Martyr confesseth of himself, that seeing the pious lives and patient sufferings of the Saints, he concluded that that was the truth they professed, and sealed with their blood. These, in things imitable, are as the cloud that led Israel; but in things unwarrantable (for in many things we fail all) as the black of the cloud, which who so followeth with the Egyptians, is like to be drowned as they.

Let us lay aside every weight] Or burden, or swelth. He that runs in a race will not have a burden upon his back, or shut up himself in a strait-bodied suit. ὄγκον.

The sin which doth so easily beset us] Or that sticks so close to us, or that troubles and puzzles us, or that curbs and girds us in, that we cannot run at liberty. Inordinate passions (saith one) come like foul weather, before we send for them; they often prevent all action of the will: but good affections are so overlaid with sin (which compasseth us about) that if we gather not winde under their wing (so ponderous the flesh is) they cannot mount up to purpose. εὐπερίστατον.

Let us run with patience] This seems to be a contradiction (as one observeth) for running is active, patience passive: but he that here runs without patience, never gets to the end of the race; for in the race of Gods commandments, men have foul play: one rails, another stops him, &c.

The race] Gr. The strife-race, for we must run and fight as we run, strive also to out-strip our fellow-racers. ἀγῶνα.

Verse 2. Looking unto Jesus] Gr. Looking off those things that may either divert or discourage, and looking unto Jesus with loving and longing looks. A Persian Lady being at the marriage of Cyrus, and asked how she liked the Bridegroom? How? said she; I know not. I saw no body but mine own husband. Saints have a single eye, an eye of Adamant, which will turn onely to one point, to Christ alone. ἀφορῶντες.

The author and finisher] The Alpha and Omega, the beginner and ender. In all other things and arts, Non est ejusdem invenire & perficere, the same man cannot begin and finish. But Christ doth both, Phil. 1. 5.

Endured the cross] Ran with a courage though he ran with the cross upon his back all the way.

Despising the shame] Whereof mans nature is most impatient. Christ shamed shame (saith an Interpreter) as unworthy to be taken notice of, in comparison of his design. So according to his measure, did that Nobleman, who when he came into jearing company of great Ones, would begin and own himſelf for one of thoſe they called Puritans. This was much better then that ſcholar in Queens Colledge, mentioned by Mr. Burroughs, who profeſſed he had rather ſuffer the torments of hell, then endure the contempt and ſcorn of the Puritans.

Αναλογισασθε, Comparationem inſtituite. Verſe 3. For conſider him] Gr. Make the compariſon betwixt Chriſt and your ſelves, betwixt his ſufferings and yours, and then you will ſee a difference. Our troubles are but as the ſlivers and chips of his croſs. I am heartily angry (ſaith Luther) with thoſe that ſpeak of my ſufferings, which if compared with that which Chriſt ſuffered for me, are not once to be mentioned in the ſame day.

ἐκλυόμενοι. Leſt ye be wearied and faint] Gr. Looſened, as the nerves are in a ſwoon or palſey: or, let go, as water ſpilt upon the ground. This to prevent keep your eye upon your Captain and that cloud before mentioned. There were in Greece certain fields called Paleſtæ, where young men exerciſed themſelves in wreſtling, running, &c. In theſe were ſet up ſtatues of ſundry valiant Champions, that the young men that ran or wreſtled, might fix their eye upon them, and be encouraged. When Hierom had read the life and death of Hilarion, he folded up the book, and ſaid, Well; Hilarion ſhall be the Champion that I will follow.

Verſe 4. Ye have not yet reſiſted] q.d. You may do, and muſt look to do. And if you cannot endure words for Chriſt, how will you endure wounds? If you have run with the footmen, and they have tired you, how can ye contend with horſes? Jer. 12. 5.

Striving againſt ſin] That is, Againſt ſinners that perſecute you, or the ſin that doth ſo eaſily beſet you, and ſollicite you to ſpare your ſelf, and rather to yield a little then to ſuffer ſo much. The Tabernacle was covered over with red (and the Purple-fathers tel us they take that habit for the ſame intent) to note that we muſt defend the truth even to the effuſion of blood. If we cannot endure Martyrdom (if called thereunto) and ſweat a bloody ſweat for Chriſts ſake, we cannot be comfortably aſſured that we are of his body. Chriſto ſubmittemus (ſaid that Dutch Martyr) ſexcenta ſi nobis eſſent colla. We wil ſubmit to Chriſt, though we ſhould ſuffer never ſo many deaths for his ſake. John Leaf a young man, burnt with M. Bradford, hearing his own confeſſion taken before the Biſhop, read unto him, inſtead of a pen took a pin, and ſo pricking his hand, ſprinkled the blood upon the ſaid bill of his Confeſſion, willing the Meſſenger to ſhew the Biſhop that he had ſealed the ſame bil with his blood already. See the ſtory of Will. Pikes, Act. and Mon. 1853.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1474.

Legenda hæc ſunt cum interrogatione. Piſc. Verſe 5. And ye have forgot the exhortation] Or, Have ye forgot the conſolation? Are the conſolations of God ſmall unto you, Iob 15. 11? Do ye inſtead of wreſtling with God, wrangle with him, refuſing to be comforted (as Rachel) out of the pettiſhneſs of your ſpirits, as he Pſal. 77. 2? Will ye not as children, eat your milk, becauſe you have it not in the golden diſh? Will ye be like the hedge-hog, of which Pliny reporteth, that being laden with nuts and fruits, if the leaſt filbeard fall off, will fling down all the reſt in a pettiſh humour, and beat the ground with her briſtles.

Deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening] See my love-tokens, page 37. Count it not a light matter, a common occurrence, ſuch as muſt be born by head and ſhoulders, and when things are at worſt, they'l mend again. This is not patience but pertinacy, ſtrength but ſtupidity, The ſtrength of ſtone, and fleſh of braſs, Job. 6. 12. When Gallienus the Emperour had loſt the Kingdom of Egypt, What? ſaid he, Sine lino Egyptio eſſe non poſſumus? Cannot we be without the hemp of Egypt? But ſhortly after he was ſlain with the ſword. When the Turks had taken two Caſtles in Cherſoneſus, and ſo firſt got footing in Europe, the proud Greeks ſaid, that there was but a hogſty loſt, alluding to the name of the Caſtle. But that fooliſh laughter was turned within a while into moſt bitter tears. When Callice was loſt under Q. Mary, thoſe of the faction ſtrove to aſſay the Queens grief, ſaying, that it was only a refuge for runagate hereticks, and that no Roman Catholike ought to deplore, but rather rejoyce at the damage:

Nor faint when thou art rebuked] If we faint in the day of adverſity, our ſtrength is ſmall, ſaith Solomon; and it is, Non quia dura, ſed quia molles patimur, ſaith Seneca; Not for that we ſuffer hard things, but becauſe we are over-ſoft that ſuffer them. As is the man, man, so is his strength, said they to Gideon. Josephs bowe abode in strength even when the iron entred into his soul, Gen. 49. 24. and Jobs stroak was heavier then his groaning; Job 23. 2. Invalidum omne natura querulum, saith Seneca. It is a weakness to be ever puling. See my Love-tokens, p. 44, 45.

Verse 6. For whom the Lord loves] Whom he entirely loveth and cockereth above the rest of his children. That Son in whom he is well pleased, saith Mercer on Prov. 3. 12. whom he makes his white boy, saith Theophylact here. See my Love-tokens, page 54, 55.

And scourgeth every Son] Laies upon them hard and heavy strokes. When Ignatius came to the wild-beasts, Now, saith he, I begin to be a Christian. Omnis Christianus crucianus, saith Luther. And he hath not yet learned his A B C in Christianity, saith Bradford, that hath not learned the lesson of the cross. When Munster lay sick, and his friends asked him how he did, and how he felt himself, he pointed to his sores and ulcers, (wherewith he was full) and said, Hæ sunt gemmæ & pretiosa ornamenta Dei, &c. These are Gods gems and jewels wherewith he decketh his best friends, and to me they are more precious then all the gold and silver in the world. Joh. Manl. loc. com. p. 127.

Verse 7. God dealeth with you, &c.] Corrections are pledges of our Adoption, and badges of our sonship. One son God hath without sin, but none without sorrow. As God corrects none but his own, so all that are his shall be sure to have it; and they shall take it for a favour too, 1 Cor. 11. 32.

Verse 8. Then are ye bastards] Qui excipitur à numero flagellatorum, excipitur à numero filiorum, saith one. He that escapes affliction may well suspect his adoption. I have no stronger argument against the Popes Kingdome, saith Luther, then this, Quod sine cruce regnat, that he raigns without the cross, they have no changes, surely they fear not God.

Verse 9. And we gave them reverence] Pater est; si pater non esses, &c. It is my Father, &c. This cooled the boyling rage, of the young man in Terence. Nicolas of Jemmilo a young French Martyr, when he was condemned and set in the cart, his father coming with a staff would have beaten him: but the officers not suffering it, would have struck the old man. The son crying to the officers, desired them to let his father alone, saying, he had power over him to do what he would, &c. Act. and Mon. fol. 837.

And live] For corrections of instruction (and God never chastiseth, but withall he teacheth, Psal 94. 12.) are the way of life, Prov. 6. 23. and 15. 31. See my Love-tokens, page 25, 26, 27.

Verse 10. After their own pleasure] To ease their stomacks, vent their choler, discharge themselves of that displeasure they have (and perhaps without cause) conceived against us. Not so the Lord: Fury is not in me, saith he, Isa 27. 4. Though God may do with his own as he pleaseth, yet he doth never over-do. For it goes as much against the heart with him, as against the hair with us; It is even a pain to him to be punishing, Lam. 3. 33.

That we might be partakers] Thus bitter pils bring sweet health, and sharp winter kils worms and weeds, and mellows the earth for better bearing of fruits and flowers. The Lilly is sowed in its own tears, and Gods vines bear the better for bleeding. The Walnut tree is most fruitful when most beaten, and Camomile the more you tread it, the more you spread it. Aloes kils worms, and stained cloaths are whitened by frosting.

Verse 11. The peaceable fruit of righteousness] That crown of righteousness wrought out unto us by afflictions, 2 Cor. 4. 17. These are the preludes of our triumph, yea a part of our salvation. Look therefore thorow the anger of Gods corrections, saith one, to the sweetness of his love therein, as by a rain-bow we see the beautiful image of the Suns-light in the midst of the dark and waterish cloud. And look upon these afflictions as on so many wayward and touchy guests; which while they stay, watch every officer, but when they depart, they pay freely.

Unto them which are exercised thereby] Gr. exercised naked in the fencing-school, as invincible champions. By suffering they are made more able to suffer as well beaten Soldiers, or Porters to the cross. Thus David was better able to bear with Shimei, because he was under that great affliction of Absolons rebellion.

Verse 12. Lift up the hands] Pluck up your good hearts, and buckle close to your business: how else will you run the race that is set before you? ver. 1. Gird up the loins Apoſtaſion π. loins of your minds: a drooping ſpirit makes no riddance of the way. Set all to rights, as the word ſignifieth.

Verſe 13. Make ſtraight paths] Seek not by-ways, (thoſe high-waies to hell) leap not over the hedge of any commandment, ſo to eſcape any peece of foul way: but as thoſe kine of the Philiſtims held ſtraight on their way to Bethſhemeſh, 1 Sam. 6. 12. though they had calves at home: ſo let us to heaven, though we have divers things to divert us. Let thine eyes look right on; and let thine eye-lids look ſtraight before thee, Prov. 4. 25.

Pſal. 120. 7. Verſe 14. Follow peace] Gr. Purſue it, though it flee from you. I am peace (ſaith David) but when I ſpeak of it, they are for war.

And holineſs] Or chaſtity, 1 Theſſ. 4. 4. ſuch a holineſs as is oppoſed to fornication and profaneſs. v. 16.

Without which] The Article may be neuter: and then the ſenſe is, Without which following peace and holineſs, or an holy peaceableneſs, none ſhall ſee God to their comfort.

Verſe 15. Leſt any man fail] Or, Fall ſhort, as Chap. 4. 1. See the Note there. Short ſhooting looſeth many a game: he that in a race ſitteth down ere he come to the goal, gets not the garland. Perſeverance crowns all our vertues. But its an eaſie thing to fall a napping with the fooliſh virgins (yea the wiſe alſo ſlumbered) which will prove to our coſt, when God ſhall ſend forth Summons for ſleepers.

Leſt any root of bitterneſs] Any ſcandalous ſin to the corrupting of others, and the corroding of our own conſciences, and out of which we recover not without much ado, till we have felt what an evil and bitter thing ſin is, as David did. Pſal. 51.

Verſe 16. Fornicator or profane] Hee inſtanceth in ſome roots of bitterneſs. Eſau's profaneſs appeared in theſe particulars, 1. In that he was no ſooner asked for the birth-right, but he yielded. 2. That he parted with it for a trifle, a ſiettle red, red, as he called it in his haſte and hunger. 3. That he did this, being as he thought, at point of death. 4. That he went his way when he had done, as if he had done no ſuch thing; he ſhewed no ſign of remorſe or regret. Hence he is four or five ſeveral times branded with This is Edom. This is he that had a low eſteem of ſpiritual priviledges, that judged a jewel of greateſt price worth forty-pence.

Ambroſe Who for one morſel, &c.] Many ſuch Edomites now-adaies that prefer earth before heaven, a ſwine-ſty before a Sanctuary, as the Gadarens, their part in Paris before their part in Paradiſe, as that carnal Cardinal; Vale lumen amicum, ſaid Theotimus; Farewell eyes, if I may not drink and do worſe, ye are no eyes for me. He would rather loſe his ſight then his ſin; ſo will many rather part with heaven then with their luſts. O what mad men are theſe that bereave themſelves of a room in that City of pearl, for a few carnal pleaſures, &c. Pope Sixtus the fifth ſould his ſoul to the devil to enjoy the Popedome for ſeven years.

Eſau came too ſhort becauſe too late. Think of the uncertainty of the gales of grace, and be nimble.

Amſtelſiadenſis. He was rejected] Or, Repulſed. For Iſaac when he ſaw that he had done unwilling juſtice in bleſſing Jacob, he durſt not reverſe the bleſſing; for he feared an exceeding great fear, Gen. 27. 33. Neither natural affection, nor Eſau's importunity could make him repent and repeal what he had done.

Though he ſought it carefully with tears] Tears they were of diſcontent, for he cries and at ſame time threatens his brother Jacob. Some weep for ſin, ſome for miſery, ſome for joy, ſome for compaſſion, ſome for revenge and in hypocriſie, as Eſau here who rued his deed, but repented not his ſin.

Verſe 18. For ye are not come, &c.] q. d. You are not under the law, but under grace; beware therefore of prophaneſs and licentiouſneſs. For think you that God hath hired you to be wicked? are you delivered to do all theſe abominations? Jer. 7. 10. Ought you not to walk Goſpel-high? Phil 1. 27. Will not the Angel (Chriſt) that goeth along with you, deſtroy you after that he hath done you good, if ye turn not and repent according to the rules of the Law, the Goſpel? Exod. 33. 2, 3, 4, &c.

Verse 19. And the sound of a trumpet] Shewing the nature of Gods Law, to manifest Gods will, mens sins, and to warn them of the wrath deserved: likewise to summon them to appear before the Judge.

The voice of words] That is, The delivery of the Decalogue, called the words of the Covenant, Exod. 33. 28. the ten words.

Verse 20. For they could not endure] This shews the nature and use of the Law, contrary to that of the Gospel. It is a killing letter, written in blood, holding forth justice only, and no mercy.

Verse 21. Moses said, I exceedingly] This Paul might have by tradition, or rather by revelation, unless he gathered it from Exod. 19. 19. compared with Dan. 10. 8, 16, 17, 19.

Verse 22. But ye are come to Mount] And the blessings that come out of Sion (Grace and peace that come by Jesus Christ) are better then all other blessings of heaven and earth, Psal. 134. 3.

The heavenly Jerusalem] As Jerusalem was distinguished into two Cities, the superiour and the inferiour; so is the Church into triumphant and militant; yet both make up but one City of the living God.

To an innumerable company] Gr. To Myriads, or many ten thousands of Angels. Some have said that they are 99. to one, in comparison of the Saints: grounding their conceit upon the parable of the lost sheep, Luke 15.

Verse 23. To the general assembly] Or publike meeting of a whole Countrey, as at a great assize, or some solemn celebrity. The Roman Emperours raised up ample Amphitheatres in a circular form, that the people sitting round about, might have a commodious sight of such pleasant spectacles as were set before them. That which Pompey erected was of such extent, that it was able to receive 40000 men, as Pliny witnesseth. But O what a glorious Amphitheatre is that of heaven? What a stately Congregation-house? O praeclarum diem cum ad illud animorum concilium coetumq; proficiscar, & cum ex hac turba & colluvione discedam! Surely, if Cicero or some other Heathen could say so, how much more may we exult and say, O that dear day when we shall go out of this wretched world, and wicked company, to that general assembly of holy and happy souls! And how should we in the mean while turn every solemnity into a school of Divinity: as when Fulgentius saw the Nobility of Rome sit mounted in their bravery, it mounted his meditation to the heavenly Jerusalem. And another when he sat and heard a sweet consort of musick, seemed upon this occasion carried up for the time before-hand to the place of his rest, saying very passionately, What musick may we think there is in heaven! Cic. de senectute. M. Esty. Art of Meditat. by D Hal.

Which are written in heaven] In Jerusalem records were kept of the names of all the Citizens, Psal. 48. 3. so in heaven. And as the Citizens of Rome might not accept of freedom in any other City: so neither should we seek things on earth, as those whose names are written in the earth, Jer. 17.

Verse 24. That speaketh better things] Every drop whereof had a tongue to cry for vengeance: whence it is called bloods in the plural, Gen. 4. 10. But the blood of sprinkling (so Christs blood is here called, either in allusion to the blood of the Paschal Lamb sprinkled on the door-posts, Exod. 12. 7. or else to the sprinkling of that blood of the Covenant described Exod. 24. 8. with Heb. 9. 18.) speaketh reconciliation, peace and eternal life.

Verse 25. See that ye refuse not, &c.] Gr. That ye shift him not off by frivolous pretences and excuses, as those Recusant guests did, Mat. 22. It is as much as your souls are worth. Look to it therefore. παραιτησησθε. βλεπετε.

That speaketh from heaven] By his blood, Word, Sacraments, motions of his Spirit, mercies, &c. If we turn our backs upon such bleeding embracements, and so kick against his naked bowels, what will become of us? And mark, that he speaketh of himself, as one.

Verse 26. Whose voice then shook, &c.] viz. When he gave the Law: What shall he do when he comes to judgement?

Not the earth only, &c.] Not men only, but angels, who stand amazed at the mysterie of Christ. As for men, they will never truly desire Christ, till they are shaken, Hag. 2. 7. Gods shaking ends in setling; it is not to ruine, but to refine us.

Verse 27. And this word, Yet once more.] The Apostle commenteth upon the Prophet whom he citeth, and from that word of his, Yet once, concludeth the dissolution of the present frame of the world by the last fire, and the establishing of that new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, 2 Pet. 3. 12, 13. The force of Scripture-words is then well to be weighed by those that will draw therehence right consequences; And they have done singular good service to God and his Church, that have employed their time and their talents for the finding out the sense of the Text, by fishing out the full import and signification of the Original words. In which kind learned M. Leigh by his Critica Sacra upon both Testaments, hath merited much commendation. And now much more on his late elaborate Annotations upon the New Testament: whereby I confess I have received much help in this review.

Verse 28. A Kingdom which cannot be moved.] As the mighty Monarchies of the world could; for those had their times and their turns, their ruine as well as their rise, so that now they live but by fame only. Not so the Kingdom of heaven. You may write upon it the Venetian Motto, Nec flectu, nec flatu movetur: Neither winds nor waves can stir it. We must so endeavour after grace, as if it were to be gotten by labour, and not bestowed by favour; yet must we acknowledge it to be free, as if we had not laboured at all.

With reverence] Gr. With bashfulness, as in Gods holy presence. See Deut. 23. 13.

Verse 29. A consuming fire] viz. To profligate Professors, ungirt Christians, Isa. 33. 14. And whereas the Apostle saith Our God, he means the God of Christians also (as well as of Jews) is a consuming fire, see Exod. 23. 20. with the Note. As he is Pater misericordiarum, a Father of mercies to the penitent, so he is Deus ultionum, a God of vengeance to the rebellious. And as there is a legal and Evangelical Repentance, so also faith, to be exercised of all his people. There is an Evangelical faith, which is in applying of Christ in the promises. There is also a legal faith, which consists in believing the threatnings, and the terrors of the Lord. And if any would dwell safely with this devouring fire, let him read and practise that in Isa. 33. 14, 15. Hypocrites shall be afraid, and as womens paint falls off, when they come near the fire, so shall theirs.

Chap. XIII.

Verse 1. Let brotherly love continue.]

IT shall continue in heaven; pity therefore but it should on earth. No such heaven upon earth, next unto communion with God, as the communion of Saints.

Verse 2. Have entertained Angels.] As Abraham and Lot, who pursued hospitality, as the Apostle speaketh, Rom. 12. 13. and had such guests as they hoped not for. The Galatians received S. Paul as an Angel; so did Cornelius entertain Peter. Every child of God is an earthly Angel; and in entertaining them, Angels also (which are their Guardians) are entertained. The Philosopher told his friends when they came into his little low cottage, The Gods are here with me. God and his Angels are where the Saints are.

Ἐιτεῦθεν ἐκ ἄτεστι Θεοί.

Verse 3. Remember them that, &c.] Learn hence, saith one, That it is no new thing for the world to put bonds on them, who seek to bring them out of bondage. It is very probable that Micaiah was that disguized Prophet, who brought to Ahab the fearful message of displeasure, and death for dismissing Benhadad, for which he ever after hated him, and held him in prison.

As being your selves also in the body] Not the body of Christ, or the Church, as Calvin senseth it, but in the body of flesh and frailty, subject to like afflictions; so Erasmus, Beza, Parens, others. Now such as these must be remembred, so Ver. 7. and 16. Hence this chapter is called by a Divine, the Chapter of Remembrances, or the Remembrancers chapter.

Verse 4. Marriage is honourable] And yet say the Rhemists upon 1 Cor. 7. 9. Marriage of Priests, is the worst sort of incontinency. Is not this to play the Antichrist?

And

And the bed undefiled] Admonemur in ipso etiam matrimonio quandam esse scortationis speciem, siquis puro Dei dono purè & sanctè non utatur, ad eum finem cujus causâ est institutum, saith Beza. The Marriage-bed, though lawfull may be defiled by excess, &c. and a man may be an adulterer of his own wife. Bez. Confes. p. 194.

God will judge] the Anabaptists of Germany inferred from hence, that therefore men ought not to punish adulterers: for God reserved them to his own judgement. Two of them, Monetarius and Hetserus, were notorious whoremongers; being a pair of such Preachers, as Zedekiah and Ahab were, whom the King of Babylon roasted in the fire, because they committed adultery with their neighbors wives and spake lyes in Gods name, &c. Jer. 29. 22, 23. But what a bold man was Latimer B. shop of Worcester, who presented to Henry the eight, for a New-years-gift, a New-Testament with a napkin, having this posie about it, Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge? Ioh. Manl. loc. com. p. 487. Ib. 302 & 490. Act. and Mon. 1594.

Verse 5. Let your conversation] Gr. Your turnings and windings in the world for a livelyhood. Do your business not out of a desire to get silver, but to humble your selves by just labour. τρόπος ἀφιλάργυρος.

Be content with such things] Not to be content, is to be covetous. If men cannot bring their means to their minde, let them bring their minde to their means. A little will serve to bear our charges till we come home to heaven. Bonus pancis indiget. See the Note on 1 Tim. 6. 6. 8. The contented man sits and sings, Clem. Alex.

Hoc alii cupiant: liceat mihi, paupere cultu
Securo, charâ conjuge posse frui.

For he hath said] Five times in Scripture is this precious promise renewed, that we may press and oppress it, till we have expressed the sweetness out of it, Isa. 66. 11.

I will not forsake thee] Gr. I will not not not forsake thee. Leave us God may to our thinking, but forsake us he will not. Only we must put this and other promises in suit, by praying them over. God loves to be bound by his own words, to be sued by his own bond. Now all this is nothing to the wicked who are strangers to the promises. These God will bring into the briers, and there leave them, Ezek. 22. 20. & 29. 5. His own he will never leave, nor forsake: or if he do, as sometimes he seems, yet he will not forsake them utterly; no that he will not. The Greek here hath five negatives, and may thus be rendred, I will not not leave thee; neither will I not not forsake thee. God may desert his people, but not disinherit them; forsake them in regard of vision, not of union; change his dispensation, not his disposition. οὐδ' οὐ μή. Psal. 119. 8.

Verse 6. So that we may boldly say] Having such a promise to build and found our faith upon, we may well proceed to this holy gloriation against all opposition.

Ver. 7. Them which have the rule] Gr. Your Captains, your Guides (so Ministers are called) Your Chieftains and Champions, that bear the brunt of the battel, the heat of the day, and upon whom, as upon his white horses, the Lord Christ rideth about conquering and to conquer, Rev. 6. 2. ἡγούμενοι. Considering the end] Gr. Reconsidering, perusing it over and over, and pacing into the likeness of so holy a pattern. ἀναθεωροῦντες.

Ver. 8. Jesus Christ the same] This was the sum of their Sermons, and is the substance of their and your Faith; which therefore you must stick to, standing fast in the street which is called Straight, and not wherried about with divers and strange doctrines. Act. 9. 11.

Ver. 9 Be not carried about] Error is a precipice, a vortex, or whirl-pool, which first turns men round, and then sucks them in. Illebius Agricola, that first Antinomian, did many times promise amendment; and yet afterwards not only fell to his error again, but turned Papist, fell into the other extream. So hard a thing it is to get poison out, when once swallowed down. See the Note on Eph. 4. 14. περιφέρεσθε.

With divers & strange doctrines] That agree neither with themselves, nor with the truth.

That the heart be established] Ballasted as a ship, balanced as the Bee with a little stone taken up by her, when she hath fat to sit in a high wind, Ne leve alarum remigium precipitent flabra ventorum, as Ambrose observeth, lest the bigger blast should dash her to the ground.

Not with meats] As if they were holy, or helpfull to salvation. By meats understand all the legal Ceremonies opposed here to the Gospel, that Doctrine of grace.

Verse 10. We have an altar] That is, A sacrifice, even Christ our Passeover, whose flesh is meat indeed, Joh. 6. but to believers only, nor to those that pertinaciously plead for Ceremonies and services of the Law, Gal. 5. 4. Hic edere, est credere.

Verse 11. Are burnt without the camp] And so the Priests had no part of the sin-offering; to shew that they have no part in Christ that adhere to the Levitical services. See Lev. 16.27.

Verse 12. Without the gate] See how punctually the old Testament is fulfilled in the new. Hardly could those before Christ divine what this meant, till he had suffered it, and the Apostle had opened it. Event is the best key to types and prophecies.

Verse 13. Bearing his reproach] The reproach of Saints is the reproach of Christ, and their sufferings his, Col. 1.24. And Nehem. 4.3,5. God is more provoked then Nehemiah. He that saith, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, repays oft-times, when we have forgiven, when we have forgotten; and calls to reckoning after our discharges.

Verse 14. For here we have none] Improve this argument for the working our hearts off from the things of this world: the beauty of all which, is but as a fair picture drawn upon the ice, that melts away with it.

But we seek one to come] And here we must all turn Seekers. Seek ye first the kingdom of God &c. Matth. 5.33. See the Note there.

Verse 5. The fruit of our lips] Covering Gods altar with the calves of our lips, Hos. 14.3. This shall please the Lord better then an Ox or Bullock, that hath horns and hoofs, Psal. 69.31. This also is the seekers sacrifice, ver. 32.

Verse 16. Forget not] We very easily forget what we care not to remember. The richer, the harder usually.

For with such sacrifices] How improvident are we that will not offer a sacrifice of alms when God sets up an altar before us?

Verse 17 That have the rule over you] Gr. That are your Leaders or Captains. But now, as once in Alcibiades his Army, most will be Leaders, few Learners. See the Note on verse 7.

And submit your selves] Obey their doctrine, submit to their discipline.

As they that must give an account] These are fulmina, non verba, as Erasmus saith of a like place, Ezek. 3.18. not words but thunderbolts. Chrysostom (though he usually preached every day, and so excellently that it grew to a Proverb, Better the Sun shine not, then that Chrysostom preach not) yet he was exceedingly affected and affrighted with this dreadfull passage; being ready to say with Job, What shall I do, when God riseth up? and when he calleth to reckoning, what shall I answer? Job 31.14.

Verse 18. Willing to live honestly] Tantum velis, & Deus tibi praeccurret. David could wish well to the keeping of Gods Commandments, Psal. 119.4,5. and affect that which yet he could not effect.

Verse 19. That I may be restored] Prayer raigns over all impediments. See this excellently set forth by M. Harris in his Peters enlargement.

Verse 20. Now the God of peace] He that would reap prayers, must sow them. What could the Hebrews do less then pray for him, that prayed so heartily for them?

Our Lord Jesus] Here's his kingly office. God hath made him both Lord and Christ, Act. 2.36.

That great shepherd] That feedeth his people daily and daintily with divine doctrine. Here's his Prophetical office.

Through the blood] Here's his Priestly office. And here we must begin, if we will reckon them right.

Verse 21. In every good work, &c.] Works materially good, may never prove so formally and eventually: As when they are but external, partial, coactive, inconstant, &c.

Verse 22. Suffer the word] Sharp though it be, and to the flesh tiresom, yet suffer it. Better it is that the Vine should bleed then die. But many are like the nettle, touch it never so gently, it will sting you. Tange montes & fumigabunt. Offer to wake men out of their sleep, and they will brawl, in that case with their best friends; yea though it be with them here, as once it was with those that had the sweating sickness, If they slept they died. Few are now-adays of Vespasians mind, of whom Quintilian reporteth that he was Patientissimus veri, very patient of truth, though never so tart. Or of Gersons temper, who delighted in nothing more then a friendly reproof. This is now become as stronger Physick, not fit for every complexion and state, &c. In vit. Gers.

are a fit matter for Christian Epistles, as one well observeth from these words.

Verse 24. Salute all them] This Epistle then was first read to the people, who are required to deliver the Apostle Commends to their Ministers: The Papists debar the people, not of the Scriptures only, but of all books of the Reformed Religion: And for a terrour not to retain such books prohibited, I have seen (saith Sir Edwin Sands) in their printed instructions for confession, the hearing or reading of books forbidden set in rank amongst the sins against the first Commandment. Spec. Europ.

They of Italy salute you] Few Saints there now; The Italians hold integrity for little better then silliness; they blaspheme oftener then swear, they murther more then revile or slander. And yet even in Italy there are full four thousand professed Protestants. But their paucity and obscurity (saith mine Author) shall enclose them in a Cipher. S. Edw. Sands.

Verse 25. Grace be with you] See the Note on Phil. ver. 25.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the Epistle general of S. Iames.

Chap. I.

Verse 1. To the twelve Tribes]

ONce very devout, *Act.*26.7. still the most nimble and Mercurial wits in the world, but light, aerial and fanatical, apt to work themselves into the fools Paradise of a sublime dotage.

Sueton. c. 25. Which are scattered abroad] Banished from Rome by the Emperor Claudius, *Act.*18.1. and called by S. Peter, Strangers of the dispersion, 1 *Pet.*1.1. The Jews at this day are a disjected and despised people, according to *Deut.*28.64. having neither country nor resting place; even in Jerusalem Breerw. Enq. there be not to be found at this day an hundred households of them.

Verse 2. Count it all joy] The world wondreth (saith Mr. Philpot the Martyr) how we can be so merry in such extream misery. But our God is omnipotent, who turneth misery into felicity. Believe me, there is no such joy in the world as the people of Christ Act and Mon. have under the cross; I speak it by experience, &c. He counted it so upon mature deliberation, as the Apostle here adviseth. fol.1668.

All joy] That is, full joy (by an Hebraism) compleat and perfect; such as is the joy of Merchants when they see their ships come laden in.

When ye fall into] Not go in step by step, but are precipitated, plunged. Or when ye fall among, as he that went down towards Jericho fell among thieves, *Luk.*10.30. When ye are so surrounded that there's no escaping them, being distressed, as David was, *Psal.*116.3.

Aliud ex alio malum. Teren. Into divers temptations] Crosses seldom come single (Catenata piorum crux) as neither do mercies, but trooping and treading one upon the heels of another. After rain cometh clouds, *Eccl.*12.2. As in April, no sooner is one showre unburdened, but another is brewed. And when the Apostle calleth them temptations, he meaneth such afflictions as will put us hard to't, and shew what mettal we are made of; pressing, and piercing crosses.

Verse 3. The tryal of your faith] Yea such a well knit patience, as maketh a man suffer after he hath suffered, as David did from Shimei, but first from Absolom. Tile-stones till baked are not useful: but well burnt and hardened they stand out all storms and ill-weather. See my Love-tokens, p.170.

Knowing this] And therefore rejoycing, if not in the sense, yet in the use of your afflictions. See the Note on *Heb.*12.10,11.

Verse

Verse 4. Let patience have her perfect work] Patience must not be an inch shorter then the affliction. If the Bridge reach but half way over the Brook, we shall have but ill-favoured passage. It is the devils desire to set us on a hurry; he knows his temptations will then work best.

Verse 5. If any of you lack wisdom] That is, Patience to bear afflictions as he ought, chearfully, thankfully, fruitfully, so as to be able to say, Well for the present, and it will be better hereafter, which is the patient mans Motto. I thank thee O Lord for all my pain (said Francis of Assise, in all his extremity) and I beseech thee if thou think good, to add to it an hundred fold more. Feri Domine, feri, said Luther: à peccatis enim absolutus sum. Smite Lord, smite on, my sins are pardoned; all shall be for the best. Mr. William Perkins, when he lay in his last and killing torment of the stone, hearing the by-standers pray for a mitigation of his pain, willed them not to pray for an ease of his complaint, but for an increase of his patience. Qui placide sortem ferre scit, ille sapit. D. Hall Rem. of profanels.

Let him ask it of God] It hath been questioned by some, Whether a man can have patience, sine auxilio gratiæ, without the help of Gods grace. But Christians know they cannot. It is not patience but pertinacy in godless men, that call not upon God; it is stupidity of sense, not a solidity of faith; a wretchless desperation, not a confident resolution; Such was that patience put forth by Mithridates of old, and by Baltasar Gerardus the Burgundian, that slew the P. of Orange, 1584. and for the same endured very grievous torments. True patience is the fruit of prayer: this wisdom from above is one of those perfect gifts that cometh down from the Father of lights, who is therefore called the God of patience and consolation. God as he is skilfull in dirigendo, pitifull in corrigendo, so will he be bountifull in porrigendo. Aquin. 22. q. 136.

That giveth to all men liberally] Not scantly, sparingly, or with an ill will. He is no penny-father (as they say) but rich in mercy to all that call upon him. Ἐμιμήσατο τὸν βασιλέα ὁ βασιλεὺς ἡμῶν, saith Basil. Our king gives like himself, and according to his State; he is angry with those that ask him small matters. He doth not shift off his Suitors as Antigonus did the Philosopher; who first asked him a groat; he answered, that was too little for a King to give; he requested the King then to give him a talent; who replyed, that that was too much for a begger to crave. God sollicites Suitors Joh. 4. 23. and complains (as the Emperor Severus once did of his Courtiers) Hitherto ye have asked me nothing. He gives also according to his excellent greatness; as Alexander the Great gave a poor man a city; and when he modestly refused it as too great for him, Alexander answered, Non quæro quid te accipere deceat, sed quid me dare. The business is not what thou art fit to receive, but what it becometh me to give. Consil. Mon. c. 1. Ἡ βασιλικὸν τὸ δῶμα. Ἡ κυνικὸν τὸ λῆμμα. Sen. de benef. lib. 2. c. 16.

And upbraideth not] Neither with present failings, nor former infirmities. Qui exprobrat, reposcit. So doth not God; unless in case of unthankfulness. For then he will take his own, and be gone. Hos. 2. 8. 9. Tacit.

Verse 6. But let him ask in faith] See the Note on Heb. 1. 16.

Nothing wavering] We are too ready in temptation to doubt, yea to hold it a duty to doubt. This (saith one) is to light a candle before the devil, as we use to speak.

Verse 7. That he shall receive] Unless he strive against his doubting, and wade out of it, as the Moon doth out of a cloud. Qui timide rogat, negare docet; He that praycth doubtingly, shuts heaven gates against his own prayers.

Ver. 8. Unstable in all his ways] As he is that stands on one leg, or as a bowl on a smooth table. Contrarywise, a Believer is as a square stone set into the building, 1 Pet. 2. 7. shaken he may be, but he is rooted as a tree; wag he may up and down as a ship at anchor, but yet he removes not.

Verse 9. Rejoyce in that he is exalted] Gr. In his sublimity, in that high honour of his, Joh. 1. 12. This should make him hold up his head, but not too high, be chearfull, but not withall scornful. Lasci simus, sed non securi, gaudentes in Domino, sed timentes à recidivo. ἐν τῷ ὑψει αὐτοῦ. Bern.

Verse 10. In that he is made low] Drawn from that high esteem of outward excellencies. He is now made a greater man, because he seems too big for them; Or low, that is lowly.

Verse 11. Shall the rich man fade] Perish eternally, if he trust in uncertain riches, and and not in the living God. See Jam. 5.1. Thus that sapless fellow Nabal faded, when his heart died within him, nor could his riches any more relieve him then they did that rich and wretched Cardinal, Henry Beauford Chancellor of England, in the reign of Henry the sixt, who murmured at death, that his riches could not reprieve him till a further time. Fie (quoth he) will not death be hired? Will money do nothing? No; money here bears no mastery.

Act. and Mon. fol. 925.

Verse 12. Blessed is the man] Provided that God teach him, as well as chastise him, Psal. 94.12. instruct him as well as correct him. See my Love-tokens, par. 2.

He shall receive the crown] A man can be content to have his head broken with a bag of gold, so he may have it, when its done. Eternal life is called a crown; 1. For the perpetuity of it; for a crown hath neither beginning, nor ending. 2. For the plenty; because as the crown compasseth on every side, so there is nothing wanting in this life. 3. The dignity; eternal life is a Coronation-day. Tertullian wrote his Book De corona militis upon occasion of a certain Christian souldier's refusing to be crowned, and saying, Non decet Christianum in hac vita coronari; A Christian is to be crowned when he cometh to heaven.

B. Lake.

Verse 13. I am tempted of God] The inclination of mans heart to good, is of it self and properly of God, as light is of the Sun. His inclination to evil is by accident only of God, like as darkness is of the Sun-set by accident, being properly not of the Sun, but of the earth.

Δελεαζόμ. Δελεάζ, quasi δολεάζ à δόλος

Verse 14. Drawn away of his lust] Satan hath only a perswading sleight, not an enforceing might. Our own concupiscence carries the greatest stroke.

And enticed] As the silly Fish is by the bait covering the hook, being first drawn aside into the clear water. Or as the unwary Younker; drawn to folly by some subtle she-sinner; who thereupon conceiveth, and bringeth forth a Bastardly-brood.

Empedoclis vocabulum apud Aristot.

Verse 15. When lust hath conceived] As the plot of all diseases lies in the humors of the body; so of all sin, in the lust of the soul. There is in it a παραφυία, a tacite consent, a seed-plot of all sin. The Papists say (but falsly) that it is the smallest of all sins, not deserving any more of Gods wrath, then only a want of his beatifical presence, and that too without any pain or sorrow of minde from the apprehension of so great a loss. There are also of ours that say, That it is not forbidden by the law: but sure we are, it is cursed and condemned (and therefore forbidden) by the Law.

Verse 16. Do not erre] Wander not, as wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever, Jude 13. by seeking to father your faults upon God, as Adam did, Gen. 3.12.

Verse 17. Every good gift, &c.] An Hexameter verse in the Greek: as little intended perhaps by the Apostle, as the first line in Tacitus, which yet may be scanned a long verse.

And perfect giving] Not temporals only (which are good gifts) but spirituals also, those perfect givings. The greatest excellencies in us do as much depend upon God, as the effigies in the glass doth upon the face that causeth it: or as the light doth upon the Sun that father of all the light in the lower world.

With whom is no variableness] No parallax, as there is with the Sun, when he declines and leaves us darkling. This word notes the Suns motion from East to West, as the following word τροπὴ, turning, notes his motion every year from North to South. That which the Apostle would here assert is, that God tempts no man to evil, because he is unchangeably good, and can be no other.

Verse 18. Of his own will begat he us] Gr. Brought he us forth, as a special instance of his free-grace and fatherly goodness, Eph. 1.4,5. The word properly signifies, He did the office of a mother to us, in bringing us into the light of life. The Hebrew word Jalad also signifieth Genuit, peperit, parturit; & est proprium feminarum: quamvis eleganter de viro etiam & aliis rebus dicatur, to bring forth.

Marcus in Arca Noæ.

Verse 19. Swift to hear] Reaching after that word of truth, the Gospel, ver. 18. and drinking it in as the dry earth doth the dew of heaven. Life doth now enter into the soul at the ear, as at first death did. Gen. 3.

Slow

Slow to speak] We read oft, He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear; but never, He that hath a tongue to speak, let him speak; for this we can do fast enough without bidding. But hath not Nature taught us the same that the Apostle here doth, by giving us two ears, and those open; and but one tongue, and that hedged in with teeth and lips? It is also tyed and bound fast by the root, and hath for guides and counsellors the brain above, and the heart beneath it. Hence your wisest men are most silent; for they know that as some gravel and mud passeth away with much water, so in many words there wanteth no sin.

Slow to wrath] Slow to snuff at those that reprove you. See the Note on Heb. 13. 22. Rage not when touched, though to the quick.

Verse 20. For the wrath of man] Unless it be as Moses and Christs anger was, pure and free from guile and gall, prompting us to pity, and pray for the party. Exod 32. Mark 6.

Verse 21. All filthiness] Gr. The stinking filth of a pestilent ulcer. Sin is the devils vomit, the souls excrement, the superfluity or garbage of naughtiness, as it is here called, by an allusion to the garbage of the sacrifices cast into the brook Kidron, that is, into the Town-ditch. Retentio excrementorum est parens morborum. Out with it therefore. Some say that the word rendred filthiness, properly signifies the filth under the nails and armholes: but translated to the mind, it signifies Covetousness, as Sordes in Latine: but here any kind of sin, especially inward, as Superfluity may note outward evils, that do superfluere, float at top. ῥυπαρίαν κακίας.

Receive with meekness] It is ill sowing in a storm: so a stormy spirit will not suffer the Word to take place. ἐμφύτον.

The engrafted word] Engrafted upon the heart, as the scions upon the stock; or sowed in the soul, and mingled with faith, that it may bring forth fruit to God.

Verse 22. And not hearers only] The Panotii in Scythia, are said to have such large ears, as that therewith they cover their whole bodies. Such are our hearers only. Isidor. l. 11. c. 3.

Deceiving your own souls] Either as by false reckoning, or false reasoning; Gr. putting Paralogisms and Fallacies upon your selves. For hypocrites may easily deceive not others only, but themselves too; as a drunken Stage-player, that in his drunkenness acting a kings part, thinks himself a king indeed. παραλογιζόμενοι.

Verse 23. His natural face [Gr. The face of his nativity, that wherewith he was born into the world. Pythagoras wills his Scholars oft to view themselves in a glass; that if they were well-favoured, they might likewise be well-conditioned: as if otherwise, they might make it up in vertue.

Si mihi difficilis formam natura negavit,
Ingenio formæ damna rependo meæ. Ovid. Epist.

The law is a chrystal glass, wherein a man may soon see his spiritual deformities, and be advertised of his duty. See the Note on Verse 25.

Verse 24. Straight way forgetteth] Naturalists make mention of a certain creature called Ceruarius, that though he be feeding never so hard and hungerly, if he cast but back his head, he forgets immediately the meat he was eating, and runs to look after new: the Lynx is very sharp-sighted, but withall very forgetfull; out of sight, out of mind straight.

Verse 25. Whoso looketh into, &c.] As into a glass, wistly and intently with the body bowed down. Get thee Gods law as a glass to look in, saith M. Bradford; so shalt thou see thy face foul arraied, and so shamefully sawcy, mangy, pocky and scabbed, that thou canst not but be sorry at the contemplation thereof. It is said of the Basilisk, that if he look into a glass, he presently dieth; Sin doth. Physitians in some kinde of unseemly Convulsions wish the Patient, to view himself in a glass, which will help him to strive the more, when he shall see his own deformity; so reflect, &c. παρακύψας. Ser. of repent.

The perfect law of liberty] The Moral law, in opposition to the Ceremonial, or so called, because never is a man free indeed, till out of a principle of love he keep Gods law.

Not a forgetful hearer] Some are as hour-glasses, no sooner turned up, but running out immediately. Their souls are like fleeby ponds, wherein fish dye soon, and frogs live long: profane jests are remembred, pious passages forgotten.

Verse 26. Seem to be religious] There is a great deal of this Seemingness now abroad; Aliud in titulo, aliud in pyxide. Verba tua Dei plane sunt, facta vero Diaboli, as one told Pope Innocent the Third, You speak like a God, but do like a Devil; a fair professour, but a foul sinner. The form of religion is bonos; the power omnes. Many do but Act it, Play it: they do no more then assume it, as the Angels did the dead bodies, without a soul to animate them; or as Jeroboams wife put on her demure apparel, when she was to goe to the Prophet. The meer Seemer is a Jugler, Job 13. 16. impostoram facit & patitur: fumum vendidit, fumo peribit. He is like the painted grapes that deceived the living birds (saith one) or the golden apples with this Motto, No further then colour; touch them and they vanish.

But deceiveth] The heart first deceiveth us with colours, and when we are once a doating after sin, then we join and deceive our hearts by fallacious reasonings.

Verse 27. And Widows] A vine whose root is uncovered, thrives not: a widow whose covering of eyes is taken away, joys not.

Chap. II.

Verse 1. The Lord of glory]

OR, Have not the glorious faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. Faith is a glorious grace indeed.

With respect of persons] i.e. Of their outward quality or conditions, as rich poor, of this side or that, &c. Zanchy. relates of a certain Frenchman, a friend of his, and a constant hearer of Calvin at Geneva, that being sollicited by him to hear Viret an excellent Preacher, who preached at the same time that Calvin did, he answered, If S. Paul himself should preach here at the same hour with Calvin, Ego, relicto Paulo, audirem Calvinum, I would not leave Calvin to hear Paul. This is not only partiality, but Anthropolatry or Man-worship, saith he. Grynæus reports a speech of George Duke of Saxony; Although I am not ignorant, saith he, that there are divers errors and abuses crept into the Church, Nolo tamen amplecti Evangelium quod Lutherus annunciat, yet I will none of that Gospel-Reformation that Luther preacheth. Compertum est, it is for certain, saith Erasmus, that many things are condemned as heretical in Luthers writings, that in Austins and Bernards books are approved for sound and pious passages.

Erasm. epist. ad Card. Mogunt.

Verse 2 For if there come, &c.] It is probable (saith an Interpreter here) that the Primitive Christians, the better to ingratiate with the richer Pagans, gave them very great respect, contrary to that Psal. 15. 4. But I rather think the Apostle speaketh in this Text of wealthier Christians, unworthily preferred before better but poorer persons.

Verse 3. That weareth the gay cloth] As Hospinian. tels us of the dogs that kept Vulcans Temple, and as others say of the Bohemian currs, that they will fawn upon a good suite, but flie upon one that is in ragged apparel. So is it with many. Vestis virum.

Verse 4. Are ye not then partial] Or, Are ye not for so doing condemned in your own consciences? Or, Neither have ye so much as once doubted or questioned the matter within your selves, whether in so doing you have not done amiss.

& Dorsiguus.

Verse 5. Chosen the poor] This the world wonders and stumbles at. The Heathen Romans would not receive Christ (though they heard of his miracles and mighty works) into the number of their Gods, because he preached poverty, and made use of poor persons. Algoland King of Saragossa in Arragon, refused to be baptized, because he saw many Lazars and poor people expecting alms from Charlemains table; and asking what they were, was answered, That they were the messengers and servants of God: And can he keep his Servants no better, said he? I'le be none of his Servants. But what saith Christ? I know thy poverty: but (that's nothing) Thou art rich. And The poor are Gospellized; not only receive, it but are changed by it. We usually call a poor man a poor soul: a poor soul may be a rich Christian; and a rich man may have a poor soul; as he in the Gospel that had animam triticeam, a wheaten soul, Luk. 12. and and as those other rich fools in Davids days, whose hearts were fat as grease; they delighted not in Gods law, Psal. 119. 70.

Verse 6. Ye have despised the poor] Pauper ubique jacet. Zeph. 3. 12. afflicted and poor are joyned together: because poverty is an affliction, and makes a Man trodden upon. Men go over the hedge where its lowest. Therefore S. Paul joyns them together, I have learned to want, and to be abased: they that want, shall be abased, Luke 15. 30. This thy son. He saith not, This my brother, because in poverty; which is therefore to be deprecated and prayd against, as Prov. 30. 8. First propter inediam, as Gen. 37. 25. Secondly, propter injuriam, Psal. 10. 9. Thirdly, Propter infamiam. as here. Our Saviour cals that good begger Lazarus: that is, God help me, Luke 16. 29. as proper a name for a begger as could be forgiven.

Oppress you] Subjugate you, and bring your heads under their girdles; trample upon you with the feet of pride and cruelty; yea, devour you, as the greater fish do the lesser. Fera parcunt, aves pascunt, homines saviunt, saith Cyprian. The wild beasts spare Daniel, the ravenous Ravens feed Elias; onely men rage and ravage, they tyrannically oppress Gods poor people (as the word here imports) acting therein the devils part. See Acts 10. 38. (where the same word is used) there is neither equity nor mercy to be had at their hands. Hence they are called Men-eaters, Cannibals, Psal. 14. 4. and charged with beating Gods people to pieces, and grinding the faces of the poor. Isa. 3. 15. with eating their very flesh, and flaying their skins from off them, and breaking of their bones, and chopping them in pieces as for the pot, and as flesh within the cauldron, Mic. 3. 3. This is a sin against race, grace and place. Cyprian. Serm. 6.

Draw you before the judgement seats] Vex you with law-sutes, and by might rob you of your right. Cedit viribus aequum.

Verse 7. Do not they blaspheme] That is, Cause to be blasphemed, as Rom. 2. 24. 1 Tim. 1. 20. Marcellinus a Heathen Historian, taxeth the Christians of his times for their dissensions, biting and devouring one another, till they were even consumed one of another. A sad thing that a Heathen should see such hellish miscarriages among Christs followers. Am. Marc. l. 2. cap 2.

Verse 8. If ye fulfil the royal law] Acknowledging Gods soveraignty, and sending a lamb to the Ruler of the earth, Isa 16. 1. seeking the help of that free or noble spirit of his, Psal. 51. 13. that royal, ruling spirit, as the Greek version there hath it.

Verse 9. Ye commit sin] That's flat; though ye have thought otherwise. See the Note on Verse 4.

And are convinced of the law as transgressors] This they held either no sin or a small one, a peccadillo. The Civilian indeed saith, De minutis non curat lex, The Law makes no matter of small matters. But Gods law condemneth small faults; as the Sun-shine sheweth us atomes, moths.

Verse 10. He is guilty of all] The whole law is but one copulative, Exod. 16. 18. Ezek. 18. 10, 11, 12, 13. He that breaketh one Commandment habitually breaketh all; not so actually. The godly keep those Commandments that actually they break; But a dispensatory conscience keeps not any Commandment. Deus non vult cum exceptione coli, God will not be served with an exception, saith a learned Interpreter here. He that repents with a contradiction (saith Tertullian) God will pardon him with contradiction. A man must not be funambulus virtutum (saith the same Author) going in a narrow tract of obedience: but, must do every thing as well as any thing, or all is lost; his obedience must be universal, extending to the compass of the whole law. Illyr. Clavis

Verse 11. For he that said, God spake all those words, and said; there is the same divine authority for one Commandment as another. The Pharisees had their minutula legis, but Christ cries them down, Mat. 5. The Jews at this day senselesly argue, Cursed is he that abides not in all things, therefore, he is not cursed, that abides in some things only. Exod. 20.

Thou art become a transgressour of the law] Now, every transgression and disobedience receiveth a just recompence of reward. Heb. 2. 2.

Verse 12. As they that shall be judged] Or, As they that should judge by the law of liberty; which is so called, because it doth freely and fully discover unto every man, without respect of persons, the errours and evils of his life. And we should walk as patterns of the rule. See the note on Matthew 11. 19. It is also called a law of liberty, because it is freely and willingly kept of the regenerate, to whom it is no burden or bondage, κατακαυχᾶται. ab κὐχὴν Cervix, treadeth on the neck of judgement.

Verse 13. For he shall have mercy] See the Note on Mat 5. 7.

And mercy rejoyceth against judgement] That is, the merciful man glorieth, as one that hath received mercy, and shall not come into condemnation; for God's mercy rejoyceth against such a mans sins, as against an adversary, which he hath subdued and trampled on.

Liv. *dcc.*4.

Verse 14. Though a man say he hath faith] Saying serves not the turn. Livy telleth us of the Athenians, that they waged Word-war against Philip King of Macedony; Quibus solis valebant, and that was all they could do. Men may word it with Gods and yet miscary, Isa. 58. 2. 3. he is too wise to be put off with words; he turns up our leaves, and looks what fruit; whereof if he miss, he laies down his basket, and takes up his ax, Luke 13. 7. Christianity is not a talking, but a walking with God; and at the last day it shall be required of men, non quid legerint, sed quid egerint, non quid dixerint, sed quomodò vixerint, Not what they have said, but how they have acted.

Can faith save him?] That is, An ineffectual faith, that worketh not by love, such as is the faith of the Solifidians, a faith in profession only; If a man say he hath faith, and no more, as good he might say nothing. Quid verba quæro &c? That faith is easily wrought, which teacheth men to believe well of themselves, though their lives be evil.

Verse 15. If a brother or a sister] As it may befal the best to be; and they are not of the Camelion-kinde to live (with Ephraim) upon Wind, Hos. 12. 1. to be fed with fair words, or to be cloathed with a suite of compliments. Sion should be taken by the hand, Isa. 51. 18. And Tyrus converted, leaves hoarding nd aheaping up wealth, and fals to feeding and cloathing Gods poor people, Isa. 23. 18.

Verse 16. And one of you say] This age aboundeth with mouth-mercy, which is good cheap. But a little handful were better then a great many such mouth-fuls.

Be ye warmed] But with what? with a fire of words. Be filled; But with what? with a mess of words. Away with these airy courtesies. How many have we now-adaies that will be but as friends at a sneeze? the most you can get of these benefactours is, God bless you, Christ help you.

Verse 17. If dead, being alone] That is, Being workless; for life discovers itself by action; so doth true faith by trust in God, and love to men. A tree that is not for fruit, is for the fire.

Verse 18. My faith by my works] It appeared by the fruits it was a good land, Numbers 13. 23. It appeared that Dorcas was a true believer by the coats she had made; so here.

φρίσσουσι. Verse 19. Believe and tremble] Gr. Roar as the sea, and shrike horribly, Acts 19. 29. Mar. 6. 49. Their hearts ake and quake within them; and shall any man mock at Gods menaces? Shall not the devils keep holliday in hell, in respect of such Atheists?

Verse 20. But wilt thou know] Interrogatio doctrientis, saith Piscator. A question made by one that is desirous to teach.

Thou vain man] Gr. Thou empty man; for works without faith are nothing else but a nutshel without a kernel, grapes without juice, chaff without corn, saith Mercer in Jon. 3. 8.

Verse 21, Justified by Works] sc. Declarativè & in foro humano, but not before God' Rom. 3. 2. It is faith that justifieth the man; but they are works that justifie faith to be right and real, saving and justifying.

Verse 22. Wrought with his Works] Or, Was a help to his works, and was her own midwife to bring them forth of her self into the open light, Heb. 11. 17

Was faith made perfect] That is, declared to be operative and effectual.

Verse 23. And it was imputed] See the Note on Gen. 15. 6. on Rom. 4. 3. and on Gal. 3. 6.

The friend of God] A very high stile. If Eusebius held it such an honour to be the friend of Pamphilus, and Sir Fulk Greevill Lord Brook, to be friend to Sr. Philip Sidney, causing it to be so engraven upon his tomb; What is it to be the friend of God? And yet such honour have all the Saints.

Verse 24. By works a man is justified] Declaratively, as by faith apprehensively, by God effectively.

Verse 25. The Messengers] Gr. The Angels, so Luke 7. 24. Acts 12. 15. See the Notes there.

Verse 26. As the body, &c.] Yet is not charity the soul of faith, but the vital spirit only.

Chap. III.

Verse 1. Be not many masters]

Masters of opinions, that boldly obtrude upon others their own placits, and will not have them disputed or debated: Such are the Sorbonists, who rejoyce to be called Magistri nostri Parisienses, our Masters of Paris. Bacon the Carmelite was called Doctor resolutissimus, because he would endure no guessing or may-be's. The Popes parasites perswade the people, that what interpretation soever he gives of Scripture, be it right or wrong, it is without further trial to be received, as the very word of God. Præfat in 1. Sent. Est ipsi mum Dei verbum. Hosius.

Knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation] sc. If either we become heresiarchs and Sect-masters, Rev. 19. 20. or supercilious censurers of others, Mat. 7. 1, Rom. 2. 1.

Verse 2. For in many things, &c.] This is Triste mortalitatis privilegium, the sad priviledge of man-kind, as one phraseth it, to have leave to offend sometime. Every Pomgranate hath at least one rotten grain within it, saith Crates. And it is the honour of God alone to be perfect, saith Plato. Hierom pronounceth a curse upon him that shall say, that the fulfilling of the whole law is impossible to any. But Patres legendi cum venia; Hierom was out in this, and too too blame. S. James a far better man then Hierom (for he was worthily called James the just) affirmeth here of himself and other sanctified persons, we offend or stumble all. Euphormio. μόνη θεὸς γεγὼς ὃς οὐ πταίει.

A perfect man] That is, A prudent man, Psal. 37. 30, 31.

Verse 4. That they may obey us] Horses, asses, camels, elephants, God in great wisdom for the use of man, hath made without gals, that they might with the more ease be made tame and serviceable πταίομεν, impingimus omnes.

Verse 4. Whithersoever the Governour] Peterent cœlum Belgæ si navibus peti posset, saith one.

Verse 5. Boasteth great things] Gr. It doth magnifically lift up it self, as an untamed horse doth his head. It exalts it self and exults of great things. It walketh through the earth, and faceth the very heavens, Psal. 73. 9. It can run all the world over, and bite at every body: being as a sharp rasour, that doth deceit, that instead of shaving the hair cutteth the throat, Psalm. 52. 2. It is made in the shape of a sword: and David felt it as a sword in his bones Psal. 42. 10. It is thin, broad and long as an instrument most fit to empty both the speakers and the hearers heart. It is of a flame-colour, as apt to set on fire the whole Wheel of nature. vers. 6. Johnston de Nat. constant. Μεγαλαυχες.

Behold how great a matter] Or wood. Camerarius tels a story of two brethren walking out in a star-light night: Saith one of the brethren, Would I had a pasture as large as this Element; and saith the other, Would I had as many oxen as there be stars. Saith the the other again, where would you feed those Oxen? in your pasture, replied he. What? whether I would or no? yea, said he, whether you will or no. What in spite of me? Yes, said he. And thus it went on from words, till at length each sheathed his sword in the others bowels.

Verse 6. A world of iniquity] A new-found world. Not a city or countrey only, but a world of iniquity, a sink, a sea of sin, wherein there is not only that Leviathan, but creeping things innumerable.

So is the tongue amongst our members] For better purpose it was there set, sc. in the midst betwixt the brain and the heart, that it might take the advise of both: and that we might verba prius ad limam revocare, quam ad linguam,

That it defileth the whole body] Leaving a stain upon the speaker, and setting a stain upon the hearer; even the guilt and filth of sin.

Psal. 104. 26. The course of nature] Gr. The wheel of our nativity. Their breath, as fire devoureth, Isa. 33 10. The poyson of Asps is under their lips Rom. 3. 13. The venemous heat of which deadly poison, like a fire in the flesh, killeth the wounded with torments, the likeliest hell of any other. In the holy tongue Dabber signifieth a word, Debber a pest; to shew, (saith One) that an evil tongue hath the pestilence in it.

And is set on fire of hell] That is, of the devil (called elsewhere the gates of hell) as the holy Ghost (on the other side) set on fire the Apostles tongues with zeal, that flame of God, Cant. 8. 6. Acts 2. 3. Evil speech is the devils drivel; a slanderer carries the devils pack. He hath his name in Hebrew from footing it, trotting and tracing up and down to sow strife. Ragal, to defame or slander; Regel, a foot. In Greek the same word signifieth a devil and a slanderer. The tale-bearer carrieth the devil in his tongue (saith One) the Tale-bearer in his ear.

Verse 7. For every kind of beasts, &c.] See the Note on Heb. 2. 7. Some Creatures indeed may be taken, but not tamed, as the Tyger, Panther, Monoceros, of which last it is testified, quod interimi potest, capi non potest; Slain he may be, but not taken. Such unruly talkers and deceivers the Church is pestered with, Tit. 1. 10. 1 Thes. 5. 14. sons of Belial, untamable, untractable, untouchable, unteachable, 2 Sam. 23. 6, 7 & 1 Sam. 25. 17.

Verse 8. But the tongue, &c.] Where then are our Justiciaries with their pretended perfection? Davids heart deceived him. Psal. 39. 1. I said I will look to my ways, I will bridle my tongue. But presently after, he shews how soon he brake his word, My heart was hot, &c. and I spake with my tongue. Pambus in the Ecclesiastical history, could never take out that one lesson read him out of Psal. 39 1. There is one Bennus celebrated Sozomen. lib. 6. cap. 28. in the same Ecclesiastical history for this (but I can hardly believe it) that he was never seen of any man to be angry, never heard to swear, or lye, or utter a vain word.

An unruly evil] There be but five vertues of the tongue reckoned by Philosophers. But there are 24 several sins of the tongue, as Peraldus recounteth them. The Arabians have a proverb, Cave ne feriat lingua tua collum tuum; Take heed thy tongue cut not thy throat. An open mouth is oft a purgatory to the master. Full of deadly poyson. See the Note on Vers. 6.

Full of deadly poyson] Such as poysoneth it self, and poysoneth at a distance, which no other Poyson doth. Some poysons are not poysonful to some creatures: Storks feed upon Serpents, Ducks upon Toads, &c But the tongue is an universal poyson, &c.

Verse 9. Therewith bless we God] And so make our tongues our glory.

Therewith curse we men] Yea the best of men; as Core and his complices fear not to object to Moses the meek, with one breath, pride, ambition and usurpation of authority. So Shimei cursed David, the Pope curseth the Reformed Churches. But cursing men are cursed men; those detestable God-dammes especially, with their fearful self-damning imprecations and innominate soul-damning oaths, God justly may and doubtlesly doth take many of them at their words, as he did those who wished they might dye in the wilderness, Numb 14. 28.

Verse 10. Out of the same mouth] As it did once out of the mouth of Pope Julius the Annal. Gallic. second: who in the battel of Ravenna on Easter-day between him and the French, as he sate by the fire reading of his prayers, and having news of the defeat, he flung away his book, saying, Sit ergo Gallus in nomine diabolorum. The devil take the French. Is not this that mouth that speaketh great things and blasphemies? Rev. 13. 5. A loaf of the D. Prideaux Lect. same bran was that foul-mouthed Cardinal, who entering the City of Paris, and being met by the people who begged his blessing, blessed them at first; but when they came thicker upon him, and hindered his passage, he cursed them as fast; using these words, Quandoquidem hic populus vult decipi, decipiatur in nomine diaboli, i. e. Sith this people will needs be deceived, let them be deceived in the devils name. Os sceleratum & profanum Plutarch in Dion tels of a land about Athens, that brings forth the best honey, and worst poyson. In Polypidis capite bonum inest & malum. Lo such is the tongue.

γλυκύπικρος. Verse 11. Doth a fountain send forth] The fountain or rather the botch of sensual and sinful pleasure doth. Sin is a bitter-sweet, the poyson of asps, which first tickleth, and Tertul. then killeth. All creature-comforts are dulcis acerbitas, saith one. Amarissima voluptas, saith another.

Læta venire Venus, triſtis abire ſolet.

Verſe 12. Both yield ſalt water and freſh] That is ſtrange that is reported of the rivers of Peru, that after they have run into the main ſea, yea, ſome write 20. or 30 miles they keep themſelves unmixt with the ſalt water; ſo that a very great way within the ſea, men may take up as freſh water as if they were near the land. But that is as ſure as ſtrange, that an eye-witneſs reporteth of the Danuby and Sava (two great rivers in Hungary) that their waters meeting mingle no more then water and oyl: ſo that near the middle of the river I have gone in a boat (ſaith mine author) and taſted of the Danuby, as clear and pure as a well; then putting my hand not an inch further, I have taken of the Sava as troubled as a ſtreet-channel, taſting the gravel in my teeth. Thus they run 60. miles together. &c. Abbots his Geog. Blunts voyage p. 10.

Verſe 13. Who is a wiſe man] Not he that words it moſt; for multiloquio ſtultiloquium; and as any one is more wiſe, he is more ſparing of his cenſures; but every fool will be medling. Sapiens is eſt, cui res ſapiunt prout ſunt, ſaith Bernard. He is a wiſe man that judgeth aright of every thing. And all the wiſdom of a man is in this one thing, ſaith Lactantius, ut Deum cognoſcat & colat, that he know and worſhip God. Lib. 3. cap. 30.

With meekneſs of wiſdom] As it is ſaid of Athanaſius, that he was high in worth, and humble in heart; a Load-ſtone in his ſweet, gentle, drawing nature, and yet an Adamant in his wiſe and ſtout deportment towards thoſe that were evil. Hierom and Auſtin in their diſputations, it was no matter who gained the day; they would both win by underſtanding their errors. What a ſweet reſolution was that of Calvin, Though Luther call me devel, yet I will honour him as a ſervant of God? Nazianz. in encom. Athan.

Verſe 14. Bitter envying] Properly ſo called; for it flows from the gall; it ſhews that the man is in the gall of bitterneſs, and of kin to the ſtar called wormwood, Rev. 8. 11. It is alſo an evil wherein is ſteeped the venome of all other vices. It is the obſervation of a late Reverend Divine, that Gen. 38. 29. Pharez was the ſon of Tamar, Diviſion, of a palm-tree, which hath its name ab amaritudine, from bitterneſs, ſaith Pagnine. Diviſion comes from bitterneſs, and envy drinks up the moſt part of its own venome; It infecteth alſo others with her venemous breath; as that Maid mentioned by Avicen, who fed upon poyſon.

Glory not] viz. Of your wiſdom.

Lye not againſt the truth] As if ye were true Chriſtians, when in truth you are not ſo; Jeſuits you may be (thoſe great bouteſeaus of the world) but Chriſtians ye are none; ye have not ſo learned Chriſt.

Verſe 15. Earthly, ſenſual] Here's a true character of carnal wiſdom; The world is a pearl in its eyes, it cannot ſee God. Earthly it is called, as managing the luſts of the eyes unto the ends of gain; Senſual, managing the luſts of the fleſh unto the ends of pleaſure: and devilliſh, managing the pride of life unto the ends of power.

Verſe 16. For where envying and ſtrife is, &c.] The number of two hath been therefore accounted accurſed, becauſe it was the firſt that departed from unity. Diviſions (ſaith One) are like the torrid Zone, nothing proſpers under it. When the Dogſtar ariſeth, no plants thrive as at other times. When a fire is kindled in a town, the bels ring backwards: when fires of contentions are kindled in places, all things go awoke. D Rayn. M. Burr. his Heart diviſions.

Verſe 17. Eaſie to be entreated] Tractable, docible, not as horſe and mule that muſt be ruled with rigor, not with reaſon, Pſal. 32. 9 Without partiality, (or, without judging) without hypocriſie. Theſe two ſtand fitly together: to note, that the greateſt Cenſurers are uſually the greateſt hypocrites; and as any one is more wiſe, he is more ſparing of his cenſures.

Verſe 18. Is ſown in peace] Only we muſt not think to ſow and reap all in a day. By the fruit of righteouſnes may be meant the crown of righteouſneſs, 2 Tim. 4. 8. which Chriſt (the Prince of peace) ſhall put upon all the ſons of peace; as in the mean time they ſhall be called the ſons of God, Mat. 5. 9. have not only the comfort, but the credit, the name and note of ſuch. Luke 10. 6.

Chap. IV.

Verſe 1. From whence come wars]

πολεμοὶ. That is, Word-wars, needleſs and endleſs ſtrifes and contentions. The Greek word properly ſignifies quarrels, that cauſe much blood-ſhed.

Among you] Being 1. brethren; and that one conſideration ſhould quaſh all quarrels: and ſhould be like the Angel that ſtaid Abrahams hand, when the blow was coming. 2. ſcatered brethren, Jam. 1. 1. and ſhould not miſery breed unity? Is it not enough, that blows great ſtore are dealt you by the common adverſary, but your own muſt add to the violence? Surely all unkind and unchriſtian ſtrifes would eaſily be compoſed, did we not forget that we are brethren, and fellow-ſufferers.

ἡδονῶν. Even of your luſts] Gr. Of your pleaſures: for wicked men take pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs; it is their meat and drink, Prov. 4. 17. they cannot ſleep, nay live without it, verſe 16. Look how Tartarians feed upon carrion with as great delight as we do upon venſon; as the Turkiſh gally-ſlaves eat opium as it were bread; and as the maid in Pliny fed on ſpiders, and digeſted them into nouriſhment; ſo do Senſualiſts feed upon ſins murthering morſels, and ſwallow them down with delight.

Verſe 2, Ye luſt and have not] viz. To the ſatisfying of your luſts; for that's an endleſs piece of work. Luſt ſtill cries Give, Give: and is ever ſick of a ſpiritual dropſie; the barren womb, the horſleeches daughter, the grave, is nothing to this gulf, to this curſe of unſatisfiableneſs.

Becauſe ye aſk not] He muſt be of a ſedate ſpirit that prays to purpoſe. How ſhall we think God will hear us when we hardly hear our ſelves? Married couples muſt agree, that their prayers be not hindered, 1 Pet. 3. 7. There's no ſowing in a ſtorm; no taking phyſick in a hot fit, as aforeſaid.

Verſe 3. Ye aſk and receive not] Ye aſk and miſs, becauſe ye ask amiſs. It is the manner that makes or mars an action.

Verſe 4 Ye adulterers and adultereſſes] You that have your hearts full of harlotry, that go a whoring from God after the creature, that mind only earthly things, Phil. 3. 19 and woo this Mundus immundus, this Propudium, this vile ſtrumpet the world, that laies forth her two breaſts of profit and pleaſure, and enſnareth many; for the which ſhe muſt be burnt, as a whore, by the fire of the laſt day.

Know ye not] Worldlings care not to know any thing more then how to get, &c. their wits ſerve them not for better things; they cannot skill of theſe ſcripture-matters; they are brutiſhly ignorant of God and his will, of themſelves and their duties.

Is enmity with God] That ſuch both hate God, and, interchangeably, are hated of God.

Ver. 5. That the Scripture ſaith in vain] No: it doth not only ſay, but do; not only convince us that an evil and an envious ſpirit poſſeſſeth us (ſuch a ſpirit as luſteth to have others mens abilities eclipſed, that ſo our candle might ſhine alone) but alſo it giveth more grace: it not only convinceth, but converteth the ſoul, Pſal. 19. 7. It cauſeth a man to rejoyce heartily in the good parts of others; and this is more then to excell others in any excellency if this be wanting.

Verſe 6. But he giveth] Or, It, that is, The ſcripture giveth, &c. transforming us into the ſame image, and conforming us to the heavenly patern by the ſpirit that breatheth in it.

Ἀντιτάσσεται. God reſiſteth the proud] Gr. Setteth himſelf in battle-array againſt ſuch, above all other ſorts of ſinners, as invaders of his territories, and forragers or plunderers of his chief treaſures. Pray therefore to be preſerved from the perilous pinacle of ſelf-exaltation; God defieth ſuch as deifie themſelves; he knoweth them afar off, Pſal. 138. 6. he cannot abide the ſight of them. Neither need we wonder, ſith (as Boetius well obſerveth) whereas all other vices flie from God, Pride lets flie at him; yea flies in his face, and ſeeks to dethrone him; as we ſee in that proud Prince of Tyrus Ezek. 28. who thought himſelf firſt wiſer then Daniel, ver. 3. then, that he exceeded the high-Prieſt in all his ornaments, v. 13. Then, he thought himſelf to be above Adam. v. 13. then above the Cherubims bims 14. and laſtly, he ſaid he was God himſelf, and ſat in the ſeat of God. So the Pope, 2 Theſſ. 2. 4.

But giveth grace to the humble] Humility is both a grace, and a veſſel to receive grace. God poureth the oil of his grace into broken veſſels, contrite ſpirits.

Verſe 7. Submit your ſelves therefore to God] Gr. Set your ſelves under him, not above him; as the proud perſon doth, verſe 6. Sit at his feet to receive his law, as ſcholers ſat at the feet of their teachers, (See Deut. 33. 3. with the Note) obey him as your ſuperiour in all things: ſay to him, Juſſa ſequi tam velle mihi, quam poſſe neceſſe eſt. ὑποτάγητε.

Reſiſt the devil] i. e. Worldly and fleſhly luſts ſtirred up by the devil, Eph. 4. 26. Luſt reſiſted is ſin materially, not formally; for the guilt is done away, in that we do not allow it, but abhor it, as ſome are of opinion. M. Capell. of Tempt.

And he will flee from you] He is but a coward therefore: for like the Crocodile, if you follow him he fleeth, if you flee from him he followeth you. In all other fights, the firſt encounter is ſharpeſt, but here, eaſieſt; for the old ſerpent having his head bruiſed and cruſhed, cannot now ſo eaſily thruſt in his mortal ſting, unleſs we dally with him, and ſo lay our ſelves open. Eſt Leo ſi fugias: ſi ſtas, quaſi muſca recedit.

Verſe 8. Draw nigh to God] viz. In duty, and he'l draw nigh to you in mercy. Sanctifie him, Levit. 10. 3. and he will ſatisfie you, Pſal. 91. 16. The very Turks are remorſeleſs to thoſe that bear up; but they receive humiliation with much ſweetneſs.

Cleanſe your hands] For there's no comming near God, Joſh. 24. 19. The very Heathens knew this; and had therefore their cœna pura before their ſolemn ſacrifices; and the ſacrificers were appointed to purifie themſelves ſome days before. We waſh our hands every day; but, when to dine with ſome great man, we ſcour them with bals. God will be ſanctified in all them m that draw nigh to him, Lev. 10. 3. he will be ſerved like himſelf; he will be no loſer by us. Godw. Antiq. Demoſth.

Ye double-minded] Ye that have your hearts divided betwixt two, and as it were cloven aſunder; Out with the corruption that cleaveth to your hearts; and then there will be a conſtancy and an evenneſs in your mouths and manners.

Verſe 9. Be afflicted] Or, Be miſerable; Ye are ſo, but ſee your ſelves to be ſo. Or, afflict your ſelves, viz. with voluntary ſorrows for your ſins. See that ye be active here. ταλαιπωρήσατε.

And mourn] Savourily and ſoakingly, with a deep and down-right ſorrow, ſo as a man would do in the death of his deareſt friend. The Greek word imports a funeral-grief. πενθήσατε.

And weep] In judgement at leaſt; and then, dry ſorrow may go as far as wet, where tears will not come. But if it be poſſible, look not upon ſin with dry eyes: point every ſin with a tear.

Let your laughter be turned] Turn all the ſtreams into this one channel, that may drive the mill, that may grinde the heart. Meal was offered of old, and not whole corn.

And your joy to heavineſs] Such as makes a man hang down his head, and go heavily through grief and ſhame. κατήφεια. Triſtitia cum vultus demiſſione. Budæus.

Verſe 10. Humble your ſelves] He beats oft upon this moſt needful, but much neglected duty of humiliation: and all's little enough; there being nothing that more goes againſt the heart and the hair with us, then to go downward; and yet it muſt be done, or we are undone.

And he ſhall lift you up] The Lion of Judah rents not the proſtrate prey. But as William the Conquerour ever held ſubmiſſion ſatisfactory for the greateſt offences, and often received rebels into grace: ſo doth Chriſt much more. The Sun in the morning gathereth clouds, but then it ſoon ſcattereth them again: ſo doth the Sun of righteouſneſs caſt men down, that he may raiſe them up again. Daniels Chro. fol. 51.

Dejicit ut relevet, premit ut ſolatia præſtet,
Enecat ut poſſit vivificare Deus.

Verſe 11. Speak not evil, &c.] As Ezekiel's hearers did of him By the wals, and in the doors of the houſes, Chap. 33. 30. and as too many of ours do; for the which they will be be full dearly accountable. The tale-bearer hath the devil in his tongue, the tale-hearer in his ear.

Speaketh evil of the law] Which flatly forbiddeth detraction. And as the ſtrokes given upon the left ſide are felt upon the right: ſo it is here. The law is evil ſpoken of, when a brother is evil-ſpoken of.

And judgeth the law] As not ſevere enough, or as over-ſtrait. Plato commendeth that law of the Lydians, that puniſheth detracters like as they did murtherers. There is a murther of the tongue alſo, Ezek. 22. 9.

Verſe 12. There is one law-giver] What doſt thou then do pierking into his place, by cenſuring and defaming another: Is not this to be a Pope in thine own cauſe, exalting thy ſelf above God, 2 Theſſ. 2. 4. or at leaſt appealing from him to thy ſelf?

Verſe 13. We will go into ſuch &c.] As if they were petty gods within themſelves, and needed not to call God into counſel, or to take his leave along with them. But ſuch confident exchange language became not the mouths of ſcattered exiles. And yet it is the common ſin of diſperſed Jews in all places to this day. And I would it were their ſin only; and that this rude and raſh peremptorineſs were not in uſe amongſt us alſo.

Verſe 14. Ye know not what &c.] God delights to croſs ſuch vain boaſters, and to confute their confidences, that ſpeak and live, as if their lives were riveted upon eternity. They might eaſily obſerve that many things fall out betwixt the cup and the lip, betwixt the chin and the challice. Ne glorietur igitur accinctus quaſi diſcinctus. Sell not the hide before ye have taken the beaſt. Who knows what a great-bellied day may bring forth? Proverbs 27. 1. Whiles a woman is yet with child, none can tell what kinde of birth it will be, Luke 12. 16, 17.

It is even a vapour] Thy breath is in thy noſtrils, ever ready to puff out: at the next puff of breath thou maiſt blow away thy life. Petrarch relates of a certain holy man, that being invited to a feaſt on the morrow, he anſwered, I have not had a morrow-day to diſpoſe of this many a year; If you would any thing of me now, I am ready. Meer man is but the dream of a dream, but the generation of a fancy, but a poor feeble unable dying flaſh, but the curious picture of nothing. Can a picture continue that is drawn upon the ice? (What is man ſaith Nazianzen) but ſoul and ſoyl, breath and body; a puff of wind the one, a pile of duſt the other, no ſolidity in either? Surely every man in his beſt eſtate, when he is beſt underlaid, and ſetled upon his beſt bottome, is altogether vanity. Two fits of an ague could ſhake great Tamberlane to death, in the midſt of his great hopes and greateſt power, when he was preparing for the utter rooting out of the Othoman family, and the conqueſt of the Greek Empire. What is mans body but a bubble? the ſoul the wind that filleth it? the bubble riſeth higher and higher till at laſt it breaketh; ſo doth the body from infancy to youth, and thence to age, &c. So that it is improper to ask when we ſhall die? but rather when we ſhall make an end of dying (ſaith a divine) for firſt the infancy dyeth, then the childhood, then the youth, then age, and then we make an end of dying. Should we then live and trade as if your lives were rivetted upon eternity? Too blame were thoſe Agrigentines who did eat, build, &c. as though they ſhould never die.

Conſilium ſi non detq; juveteq; Deus.

Pſal. 64. 9.

Verſe 16. In your boaſtings] Of long life and ſuitable ſucceſs. God will ſhoot an arrow at ſuch ſuddenly, as he did at the rich fool, Nebuchadnezzar, Haman, Herod, Senacherib and other bragadochio's.

Verſe 17. To him that knoweth] Leſt they ſhould reply, We know all this, that except we live and God liſt, we can do nothing. Do ye know to do well, ſaith he, and do it not? this increaſeth your guilt. Sin againſt knowledge is ſin with an accent, wickedneſs with a witneſs, ſuch as is not to be excuſed by any plea or colour. See Joh. 9. 41. with the Note.

Chap. V.

Verse 1. Go to now ye rich men]

THose rich wretches mentioned, *chap.*2.6,7. that blaſphemed God, and oppreſſed men. Magna cognatio ut rei ſic nominis, divitiis & vitiis.

Weep and howl] Better weep here, where there are wiping-handkerchiefs in the hand of Chriſt, then to have your eyes whipt out in hell. Better howl with men, then yell with devils.

That ſhall come upon you] Gr. That are even now ſtealing upon you. ἐπερχομέναις.

Verſe 2. Your riches are corrupted] Being ſubject to vanity and violence, *Mat.*6.19. See the Note there. Provide your ſelves therefore bags that wax not old; treaſure that faileth not, *&c. Luk.*12.33.

Verſe 3. And ſhall eat your fleſh] i.e. With hell-fire, which ſhall conſume your fleſh, nay your ſouls with eternal torments. Some ſtrong poiſon is made of the ruſt of metals: none worſe then that of money.

For the laſt days] Wrath for the day of wrath; or ſtore for old-age, it being the old mans care, as Plutarch obſerves, ὅτι οὐκ ἔχει διὰ γῆρας καὶ πένητας, That he ſhall not have what to keep him while alive, and what to bury him honeſtly when dead.

Verſe 4. Kept back by fraud crieth] Bloodſhed, *Gen.*4.10. unnatural luſt, *Gen.*18.21. and oppreſſion (whether by force or fraud) cry to God, and he will hear, for he is gracious, Exod.22.27. Oppreſſion is a boney ſin, Amos 5.12,13.

Clamitat in cœlum vox ſanguinis, & Sodomorum,
Vox oppreſſorum, & merces detenta laborum.

Lord of Sabbaoth] Who hath all power in his hand, and can eaſily reach you.

Verſe 5. Ye have lived in pleaſure] Ye have lain melting in ſenſual delights, which have drawn out your ſpirits, and diſſolved them. τρυφὴ of θρύπτω.

Upon earth] No place of pleaſure to good men, but of purgatory, baniſhment and bondage. A place of that nature, that (as it is reported of the Straits of Magellan) which way ſoever a man bend his courſe (if home-ward) he is ſure to have the wind againſt him. It was a heavy charge laid upon Dives, Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedſt thy good things, &c. Luk.6.15.

And been wanton] Fulneſs breeds forgetfulneſs, *Deut.*32.15. The word properly ſignifies, Ye have petulantly skipped up and down, like young kids; ye are ſo wanton that ye know not whether to go on your heads or on your feet. This was the guiſe of theſe rich Riotors. ἐστρηλιάσατε.

As in a day of ſlaughter] For ſacrifice; when they uſed to have good chear, *Prov.*7.14. And hereunto the Wiſe man alludeth, *Prov.*17.1. The Apoſtle here ſeemeth to intimate, that theſe rich ſenſualiſts lived upon the cream of ſinning, and had ſuch plenty, that they pickt out none but the ſweeteſt bits to nouriſh their hearts withal.

Verſe 6. Ye have condemned and killed] Take it either properly or Metaphorically, of uſerers and extortioners, that not only rob, but raviſh the poor that are fallen into their nets, *Pſal.*10.9. that is, their bonds, debts, mortgages, as Chryſoſtom interpreteth it: there is neither equity nor mercy to be had at their hands; hence they are called men-eaters, Canibals, &c. One ſaith there is more juſtice to be found in hell, then here among men; for in hell no innocent perſon is oppreſſed.

And he doth not reſiſt you] Meekneſs of Spirit commonly draws on injuries and indignities from unreaſonable men. A Crow will ſtand upon a ſheeps back, pulling off wool from her ſide, ſhe durſt not do ſo to a Wolf or a Maſtiff. Veterem ferè do injuriam invitas novam Verſe 7. Be patient therefore] q.d. You poor oppreſſed ones, hold out faith and patience. You ſhall ſhortly have help. As the Mothers breſts ake to be ſuckling, ſo doth Gods heart yern to be helping.

Unto the coming of the Lord] ſc. By particular deliverance; and not only by the general judgement. Let patience have line and rope.

Waiteth for the precious fruit] Being in novum annum ſemper dives, as the proverb is, ever rich againſt the next year. Spes alit agricolas. Hope holds up the husbandmans heart.

And hath long patience] He looks not to ſow and reap in a day, as the Hyperboreans are ſaid to do, that ſow ſhortly after the Sun-riſing with them, and reap before the Sun ſet; becauſe the whole half year is one continuate day with them. Heresbach. de re ruſtic.

Verſe 8. For the coming] See ver. 7. And he when he comes, ſhall ſet all to rights: We ſhall ſee ſo much reaſon in his proceedings, which now we comprehend not, that we ſhall yield him the only wiſe God.

Verſe 9. Grudge not, &c.] Groan not, Grumble not, grow not ſowr and ſullen one to another. Μὴ στενάζετε.

Leſt ye be condemned] As Sarah had been, if the Lord had come, as ſhe deſired him, to judge betwixt her and her husband. The moſt guilty are commonly moſt querulous and complaint-full.

The judge ſtandeth before the door] If the Magiſtrate be preſent, we may not offend another, to defend our ſelves. Ecce judex pro foribus: Therefore, Hold a blow, as we ſay.

Verſe 10. For an example of ſuffering] Examples very much affect us, as they did many of the Martyrs. See the Note on Mat. 5. 12.

A bove majori diſcit arare minor.

Verſe 11. We count them happy] If they ſuffer as they ſhould do, not elſe: Mithridates ſhewed long patience, ſuch as it was, forced and fained. He was in a kinde of Fever called Epialis, wherein men be cold without, but hot as fire within. This Fever he quenched with his vital blood, ſhed with his own hand.

Ye have heard of the patience of Job] His impatience is not once mentioned againſt him; but he is crowned and chronicled here for his patience. God paſſeth by infirmities, where the heart is upright.

And have ſeen the end of the Lord] That is, how well it was with Job at the laſt. Or (as others will have it) what a ſweet end the Lord Chriſt made; whereunto you were ſome of you eye-witneſſes, and ſhould be herein his followers.

And of tender mercy] Having for his Motto that of the Emperor Rupert, Miſeria res digna miſericordia, Miſery calleth for mercy.

Verſe 12. But above all things] Swear not in jeſt, leſt ye go to hell in earneſt. See the Note on Mat. 5. 34, 35. and on Mat. 23. 16, 18. Swear not in your paſſion (the Apoſtle is here exhorting them to patience) as the Jews did ordinarily, and ſo it were by the creature, held it no great ſin, Mat. 5. 33. and 23. 16. The Swearer rents and tears Gods name as a Draper raſheth out a piece of Cloth to the buyer. He makes his tongue a Granado to ſhoot our oaths and blaſphemies againſt heaven. He ſhall one day ſmart for it in his tongue as Dives did, and be worſe puniſhed then the French were in the days of Lewis 11. who puniſhed ſwearing by ſearing the lips of the ſwearer with an hot iron.

Verſe 13. Is any among you afflicted] Any one may: for grace is no target againſt affliction.

Let him pray] Not only becauſe prayer is ſuitable to a ſad diſpoſition, but becauſe it is the conduit of comfort, and hath virtutem pacativam, a ſetling efficacy. beſides, there is no time for hearing of prayers, like the time of affliction. Then the Saints may have any thing of God with reaſon; for then his heart is turned within him, his repentings are kindled together, Hoſ. 11 8. See Zach. 13. 9. Pſal. 91. 15. Then it was that Lot had Zoar given him, David, the lives of his enemies; Paul, all the ſouls in the ſhip, &c. See the promiſe, Pſal. 50. 15.

Is any man merry] Gr. Is he right ſet, well hung on, as we ſay? All true mirth is from the rectitude of the minde, from a right frame of ſoul, that ſets and ſhews it ſelf in a chearfull countenance. Εὐθυμεῖ.

Let him ſing Pſalms] So that in all eſtates we muſt be doing ſomewhat for God. Tam Dei

Dei meminisse opus est, quam respirare. A Christians whole life is divided into praying and praising, as Davids Psalms are. If he begin with petition, he commonly concludes with thanksgiving. Thus, by an holy craft, he insinuates into Gods favour; driving a Trade betwixt earth and heaven, receiving and returning, importing one commodity and transporting another.

Verse 14. Is any man sick?] Behold he whom thou lovest is sick, said Martha to our Saviour, Mat. 11. Si amatur, quomodò infirmatur, saith Augustine? If Christs friend, how comes he to be sick? Well enough: Its no new thing for Christs best beloved to be much afflicted.

Let him send for the elders] This help God hath provided for such as are by sickness disabled to pray for themselves. Sick Abimelech was sent to Abraham (a Prophet) for prayers.

Anointing him with oil] As an extraordinary sign of an extraordinary cure. From mistake of this Text, the Church instead of Pastors had Ointers and Painters in times of Popery, who did not only ungere, but emungere, anele men, but beguile them of their monies, and of their souls. Neither want there at this day, that hold this anointing the sick as a standing ordinance for Church-members amongst us; and they tell of strange cures too effected thereby. I hope they aym better then Pflugius and Sidonius, Authors of that wicked piece called the Interim, did; for they defended the Popish Chrisme and extream Unction, ut ipsi discederent unctiores, (as one saith) that they might get fat Bishopricks thereby. The Popish ointment differeth much from St. James his oyl, used as an outward Symbole and sign till miracles ceased. See Mar. 16, 17. Act. 3. 16. Proculus a Christian, healed Severus the Emperor on this wise, as Tertullian testifieth. Adverf. Scapulam.

Verse 15. And the prayer of Faith] The Greek word for prayer hath its denomination from well pouring out the heart, or from well cleaving to God. Afflictions (saith one) cause us to seek out Gods promise, the promise to seek faith, faith to seek prayer, and prayer to finde God. εὐχὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ εὖ χέειν, vel ἀπὸ τοῦ εὖ ἔχεσθαι τοῦ Θεοῦ.

They shall be forgiven him] And so he shall be cured on both sides. He shall be sure to have his prayer out, either in money or moneys-worth; his labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.

Verse 16. Confess your faults] To any such godly friend, as can both keep counsel, and give counsel. Often times the very opening of mens grievances easeth; the very opening of a vein cools the blood. Howbeit, it is neither wisdom nor mercy (saith a good Divine) to put men upon the rack of confession, further then they can have no ease any way else. For by this means we raise a jealousie in them towards us, and oft without cause: which weakeneth and tainteth that love that should unite hearts in one.

The effectual fervent prayer] Gr. The working prayer, that sets the whole man a work to do it as it should be done, and so works wonders in heaven and earth; being after a sort omnipotent, as Luther said. The word rendred effectual fervent, is by one rendred a thorough-wrought prayer. An allusion he maketh it to cloth, or such like, which we use to say is thoroughly well wrought, or but slightly wrought. ἐνεργουμένη.

Availeth much] Jamblicus a profane writer hath such a commendation of prayer, as might well beseem a better man. He calleth it Clavem qua Dei penetralia aperiuntur, rerum divinarum ducem & lucem, &c. The key of Gods treasury, the guide to God, &c. In the Island called Taprobane, they sail not by any Observation of the Stars; they cannot see the North-pole; but they carry Birds along with them which they often let go, and so bend their course the same way; for the Birds will make toward Land. Let us oft send up prayers to heaven, and let our hearts go along with them, and they will certainly speed. God will come, but he will have his Peoples prayers lead him, Daniel 10. 12. I came for thy word. He will help, but then we must work in Prayer; and as when a Cart is in a Quagmire, if the horses feel it coming, they'l pull the harder; so must we, when we finde deliverance is coming, and that God is upon his way. Lib. 5. c. 27.

Fervent prayer may fitly be resembled to the precious stone Pyrites, which if rubbed, grows hot, and burneth the fingers; as on the other side, dull prayers do little good, but are as the precious stone Diacletes, which having many vertues in it, looseth them all, if put into a dead mans mouth, as Naturalists tell us.

Verse 17. Subject to like passions] For he fled at the threats of Jezabel, Factus seipso imbecillior, saith one: and he would have died, when under the Juniper, discontented.

Verse 18. And the earth brought forth] When the roots and fruits seemed all dried up, and the Land past recovery. But prayer never comes too late, because God never doth.

Verse 19. If any do err from &c.] Err about fundamentals, fall into deadly heresie; Damnable, Peter calleth it, 2 Epist. 2. 1.

Verse 20. Shall save a soul] A high honour to have any hand in such a work.

Cover a multitude] i.e. He shall be a means that God shall cover them.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the first Epistle general of S. Peter.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. To the Strangers]

THat is to the Provincial Jew. See the Note on Jam. 1.1. These strangers were (probably) those that came up to Jerusalem at Pentecost, and were converted by St. Peter, Act. 2. to whom therefore he here writes, as to new-born Babes, chap. 2.2. and such as met with manifold afflictions for Christs sake, chap. 3. 14. &c. He exhorts them therefore to stedfastness in the Faith, and constancy in tryal. Christs young plants need watering.

Verse 2. Through sanctification unto obedience] To the means as well as to the end, to sanctification as well as to salvation. Some there be (saith Mr. Philpot in an Epistle of his to the Congregation) that for an extream refuge in their evil doings, run to Gods election, saying, If I be elected I shall be saved, whatever I do. But such be great tempters of God, and abominable blasphemers of his holy election: These cast themselves down from the pinacle of the Temple in presumption, that God may preserve them by his angels thorow predestination. Gods election ought to be with a simple eye considered, to make us more warily walk according to his Word, and not set cock in the hoop, and put all on Gods back, to do wickedly at large. Thus he. Act. and Mon. fol. 1663.

Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied] Or, enlarged to the utmost, filled up, and accomplished. He prays for further measures, that they might be past the spoon and get to a well-grown, full-grown age in Christ, Eph. 4.13. until they came to be Fathers gray-headed, experienced Christians, such as the Psalmist speaketh of, Psal. 92. 12, 13, 14. πληθυνθείη.

Verse 3. Blessed be the God] A stately proeme, and such as can hardly be matched again, unless it be that of S. Paul to the Ephesians, chap. 1.3.

Unto

Unto a lively hope] Sure and solid, clearing the conscience, and chearing the spirit. Vivere spe vidi qui moriturus erat. If it were not for hope, the heart would break; as they do, whose lives and hopes end together. True hope lives when the man dies. It hath for its motto, Dum expiro, spero. The righteous hath hope in his death, as St. Steven had; who

Bembus. Ibat ovans animis, & spe sua damna levabat,

Went with good cheat to take his end. And many of the holy Martyrs went as willingly to die, as ever they did to dine, they called it their wedding-day. They knew it was but winking only, and they should be in heaven immediatly; hence their invincible courage at the hour of death. The ungodly are not so; their hopes are dying hopes, they are no better then as the giving up of the Ghost, Job 11.20.

Verse 4. Undefiled, and that fadeth not] The two Greek words here used are also Latine; Amiantus is a precious stone (saith Doctor Playfere out of Isidore) which though it be never so much soiled, yet it cannot be blemished. And Amarantus is the name of a flower, which being a long time hung up in the house, yet will is fresh and green, as Clemens writeth. To both these possibly the Apostle might here allude: And it is as if he should say, The crown that you shall receive, shall be studded with the stone Amiantus, which cannot be defiled; and it is garnished, with the flower Amarantus which is fresh and green, &c.

φρουρουμένους. Verse 5. Who are kept] As with a guard, or as in a garison, that is well fenced with walls and works, and so is made impregnable.

By the power of God] Much seen in the Saints perseverance. My father is stronger then all: none therefore can take you out of my hands, sith I and the Father am one, Joh. 10.

ἀγαλλιᾶσθε. Verse 6. Wherein ye greatly rejoyce] Gr. Ye dance for joy, ye dance a galliard, or as children do about a bonefire; ye cannot but express your inward joy in your countenance, voice and gesture.

If need be, ye are in heavinesse] When our hearts grow a grain too light, God seeth it but needfull to make us heavy through manifold temptations. When our water (as it were) looks but a little too high, our heavenly father, a Physitian no less cunning then loving (saith one) doth discern it, and quickly ties us, whom he most tendereth, with that which will reduce all to the healthsom temper of a broken spirit.

Bayns letters.

Verse 7. That the trial of your faith] If affliction (which is the trial of our faith) be so exceeding precious, what is faith then, and the promises whereon faith lays hold? There are that by the trial of faith understand here a wel-tried faith, which is called gold tried in the fire, Rev. 3.18.

Pareus. Verse 8. Whom having not seen] They had not been, belike, at the feast of the Passover (at which time our Saviour suffered) but came up to the feast of Pentecost, and were converted, Act. 2.

δεδοξασμένῃ. And full of glory] Gr. Glorified already; a piece of Gods kingdom and heavens happiness aforehand. O the joy! the joy! the inexpressible joy that I finde in my soul! said a dying Saint.

Verse 9. The end of your faith] The period and perfection, the reward and meed of it, in all fulness. See Psal. 19.12. Prov. 22.4. Some grapes of Canaan God gave them aforehand, to sustain them, not to satisfie them.

Verse 10. The Prophets have enquired] This highly sets forth the weight and worth of it, sith such men took such pains about it. Base spirits are busied about light matters; as Domitian spent his time in catching Flies, Artaxerxes in making knive-hafts; Not so Caleb, who had another spirit, and followed God wholly: So did the ancient Prophets, as Isaiah: whiles the merry Greeks were taken up at their Olympick-games in the year 1540. from the flood; the Prophet Isaiah seeth that heavenly vision of Christ sitting on his Throne, and heareth that thrice happy Trisagion, Isaiah 6. 1, 2, 3. And in this disquisition and scrutiny, the Prophets with singular desire and industry exercised themselves, as the two compound Greek words used in the next verse do import.

Num. 14.24.

Verse 11. Searching what, &c.] With greatest sagacity and industry, as Hunters seek for game, and as men seek for gold in the very mines of the earth. ἐρευνῶντες.

The sufferings of Christ, &c.] Macarius was utterly out, in saying that the Prophets knew that Christ should be born for Mans redemption, but that they knew nothing of his death and sufferings. Isaiah writes of them more like an Evangelist then a Prophet, and is therefore called the Evangelical Prophet.

Verse 12. Not unto themselves] In regard of the accomplishment of those oracles that they uttered: and yet to themselves, in regard of their right and interest therein.

They did minister] None must hold themselves too good to serve the Saints.

The Angels desire to look into] To look wishly and intently, as the Cherubims of old looked into the Mercy-seat, Exod. 25.18,19. παρακύψαι. Prono capite & propenso collo accurate introspicere.

Verse 13. Wherefore gird up, &c.] We are seldom comforted, but we have need to be exhorted. So apt are our hearts to security, and so apt is Satan to interrupt our joys with his base injections. How soon did Hezekiah fondly overshoot himself to the Babylonish Embassadors, after his sweet entercourse with God in holy duties? And how shamefully did Jonah forget himself and break out into a brawl with God, after his Embassage faithfully discharged to the Ninivites, and the sweet comforts that came in to his soul thereupon?

Gird up the loins of your mind, &c.] Gird your selves and serve God, Luk. 17.8. A loose discinct and diffluent mind is unfit for Gods service. Girding implies, 1. Readiness. 2. Nimbleness, handiness, handsomness. The main strength of the body is in the Loins. Therefore some say, The strong purposes and resolutions of the mind are here meant.

Hope to the end] Gr. Hope perfectly or entirely; q.d. do it not by halves: let there not be any odd reckonings between God and you, but work out your salvation, Phil. 2. 12. See the Note there. τελείως

For the grace] That is, for the glory.

That is to be brought unto you] It must be brought unto us (such is our dulness) we will scarce go seek it, hardly be perswaded to live happily, raign everlastingly.

Verse 14. Not fashioning your selves] As a Player is fashioned to the obscene speeches and carriages of him whom he personateth. συσχηματιζόμενοι.

In your ignorance] Men may remain grosly ignorant amidst abundance of means, as these Jews did. Who is blind but my Servant? or deaf as my Messenger &c. Isai. 42.19,20.

Verse 15. In all manner of conversation.] Our very Civilities must savour of Sanctity, and our common conversation relish of religion. S. Pauls Civil conversation was in heaven, Phil. 3.20. Holiness must be written upon our bridles when we war; upon our cups when we drink, Zach. 14.20,21. It is said of a certain Scotch-Divine, that he did even eat and drink, and sleep eternal life. πολίτευμα Verse 16. Be ye holy] i.e. Separate from sin, and dedicated to God, in conformity to whom stands our happiness. See the Note on Mat. 5. 48.

Verse 17. Of your sojourning] Having your commoration on earth, but your conversation in heaven. Fugiamus ad cœlestem patriam, &c. could a Heathen say. παροικία, Inchoatus, commoratio.

In fear] Those that fear, of all others are most likely to hold out, Jer. 32.40. It is a reverential filial fear of God as of a father that is here required; causing us, First, To have high and honorable conceptions of God in our hearts; Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and let him be your dread, and fear ye him. Secondly, Making all honorable mention of him with our mouths whether we speak to him, or of him, Eccles. 5.1. Deut. 28.58 Presume not in a sudden unmannerliness to blurt out the dreadfull name of God; much less to blaspheme it, and bore it thorow with hideous oaths and imprecations. To speak evil of ones father, was death by Plato's law as well as by Gods law; and Suidas testifieth of the same Plato and other Heathens, that when they would swear by their Jupiter, out of the meer dread and reverence of his name, they forbare to mention him; breaking off their oath with a Μὰ τὸν, as those that only dared to owe the rest to their thoughts. Thirdly, walking before him in our whole course with an holy bashfulness, being evermore in the sense of his presence and light of his countenance, in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy-ghost, as those antient Christians, Acts 9.31.

chase a soul with (more likely they are to drown it in perdition and destruction, 1 Tim. 6.9.) Our Saviour who only ever went to the price of souls, tells us that one soul is more worth then a world, *Mat.*16.26.

Received by tradition] Children are very apt to follow their Parents example, whether of good or evill. Me ex ea opinione quam à majoribus accepi de cultu Deorum, nullius unquam movebit oratio, saith Tully, I will never forsake that way of Divine service that I have received from my fore-fathers.

Verse 19. Without blemish] Of original pollution.

And without spot] Of actual sin: or thus, without blemish, that is, sound within: and without spot, right, in the outward parts. A lamb may be fair without, that is rotten within. Christ was none such, but a complete sacrifice for sin.

Verse 20. Who verily, &c.] So carefull was God to make all sure concerning our Redemption in Christ, saith one here.

Verse 21. Might be in God] And so in a safer hand then our own; he hath laid help upon one that is mighty.

Verse 22. Ye have purified] Animabus vestris castificatis. A Metaphor from the Legal purifications.

Verse 23.] Born again] A man shall never have occasion to curse the day of his new birth.

By the word of God] Made prolifical and generative by the Spirit. 1 John, 3.9. It is the Father that regenerateth us originally, *Tit.*3.5. the Son meritoriously and effectively, John 14.19. *Ephes.*5.26. the Holy-ghost consummately and applicatorily, through faith wrought and increased in us by the Word and Sacraments. *Jam.*1.18. Acts 22.16. Be baptized, and wash away thy sins, i.e. be renewed.

Verse 24. All flesh is grass] To live is but to lie a dying. Can a Picture continue that is drawn upon the ice? Fœneâ quadam felicitate temporaliter florent, saith Austin, after David, Psal. 37.2. The wicked flourish as grass, but they shall be cutt down in their flourish.

Manlii loc. com.419. Verse 25. The word of the Lord, &c.] This Sentence is the Motto of the Dukes of Saxony. See Psal. 119.89. By the word of the Lord understand that which is written in cordibus, non in codicibus; in the heart, not in the book.

Chap. II.

Verse 1. All malice and all guile]

Out with this leven utterly, 1 *Cor.*5.7. Howsoever we otherwise fail, let us not in these be found faulty at all. These are not the spots of Gods children, *Deut.*32.5. They are without gall, without guile, children that will not lye; they do not wallow or allow themselves in any kind of these evils; which are therefore plurally expressed.

*Psal.*63.8.

Verse 2. Desire the sincere] As in children all speaks and works at once, hands, feet, mouth. See Davids desire, Psalm 42.1. & 119.20, 40, 131. The Greek word signifieth vehemently to desire. See Romans 1.11, 2 Corinthians 5.2. *Phil.*1.8 & 2.16.

The sincere] Gr. Guileless, unmixed milk, not sugred or sophisticated with straines of wit, excellency of speech, &c. 1 *Cor.*2.1.

That ye may grow thereby] After generation (1 Pet. 1.23.) augmentation. That Word which breeds us, feeds us. : as the same blood of which the babe is bred and fed in the womb, strikes up into the mothers brests, and there, by a further concoction, becometh white, and nourisheth it. And as milke from the brests is more effectually taken, then when it hath stood a while, and the spirits are gone out of it: so the word preached rather then read, furthereth the souls growth. Let it be our care that we receive not the grace grace of God in vain: that we be not like the changling Luther mentioneth, ever sucking, never batling: lest God repent him of his love and dry up the breasts; or send in the Assyrian to drink up our milk, Ezek. 25. 4. that we be not always learning, and never to know the truth, 2 Tim. 3. 6. as ants run to and fro about a molehil, but grow not greater. A Christian should go from the word, as Moses did from the mount, as Naaman did out of Jordan, or as the woman of Samaria came to the well pecatrix, went away prædicatrix, saith Ambrose.

Verse 3. If so be ye have tasted] As babes taste the milk they take down, Isa. 66. 11. We are bid to suck and be satisfied with the brests of consolation, to press and oppress the promises, till we have expressed, and even wrung the sweetness out of them. This will make us even sick of love; our sleep will be pleasant unto us, and our hearts filled with gladness. The Saints taste how good the Lord is, and thence they so long after him. Optima demonstratio est à sensibus, as he that feels fire hot, and that tastes hony sweet, can best say it is so.

Verse 4. As unto a living stone] Living and all-quickning, as Acts 7. 38. Lively, that is, life-giving oracles. He that hath the Son hath life, 1 Joh 5. 12.

Disallowed indeed of men] For the Cock on the dung-hill knoweth not the price of this jewel.

And precious] Far beyond that most orient and excellent stone Pantarbe, celebrated by Philostratus; or that precious adamant of Charls Duke of Burgundy, sold for 20000. duckets and set in the Popes triple-crown. In vita Apol. l. 3. c. 14. Alsted. Chron. p. 509.

Verse 5. Ye also as lively stones] Gods house is built of growing stones, of green timber, Cant 1.

To offer up spiritual sacrifices] Such as are prayers, Psal. 141. 2. Praises, Heb. 13. 5. Alms, Heb. 13. 16. Our selves, Rom. 12. 1. Our Saviour, whom we present as a propitiation for our sins, 1 Joh. 2. 1. laying our hands on his head, seeing him bleed to death, and consumed in the fire of his Fathers wrath for our sins.

Verse 6. Wherefore it is contained] The Jews were so well versed in Scripture, that in quoting of texts there was need to say no more to them then It is written, It is contained, &c. they could tell where to turn to the place presently: and this was a a great furtherance to the conversion of many of them, by the preaching of the Apostles. Many amongst us are better seen in Sir Philip then in St. Peter: in Monsiuer Balzacks letters then in St. Pauls Epistles; like that Bishop of Dunkelden in Scotland, they know little or nothing either of the old or new testament; and therefore one may preach riff-raff, Popery or any errour unto them, and they know not how to disprove it. περιέχει.

Shall not be confounded] The Hebrew text hath it, Shall not make haste, Isa. 28. 16. Haste makes waste, as we say, and oft brings confusion. Children pull apples afore they are ripe, and have worms bred of them.

Verse 7. He is precious] Gr. He is a peice, or an honour. If you had not found all worth in him, you would never have sold all for him. τιμὴ.

Verse 8. And a rock of offence] Like that rock, Judg. 6. 21. out of which comes fire to consume the reprobate.

Which stumble at the Word] An ill sign, and yet an ordinary sin. A bridge is made to give us a safe passage over a dangerous river; but he who stumbleth on the bridge, is in danger to fall into the river. The word is given as a means to carry us over hell into heaven; But he who stumbles and quarrels at this means, shall fall in thither, from whence otherwise he had been delivered by it. Few sins are more dangerous then that of picking quarrels at Gods word, and taking up the bucklers against it, snuffing at it, Mal. 1. 13. chatting against it, Rom. 9. 19, 20. enviously swelling against it, Acts 13. 45. casting reproaches upon it, Ier. 20. 8, 9. gathering odious consequences from it. Surely of such, a man may say, as One doth of an hypocrite; I read not in scripture, saith He, of an hypocrites conversion; and what wonder? For whereas after sin, conversion is left as a means to cure all other sinners; what means to recover him who hath converted conversion it self into sin? so here; what hope that he shall be saved who stumbleth at the only ordinary means of his salvation? D. Rainolds.

Verse 9. But ye are a chosen generation] A pickt people, the dearly beloved of Gods soul; such as he first chose for his love, and then loves for his choice.

A roiall Priesthood] Or (as Moses hath it, Exod. 20. 6.) a kingdome of Priests, Priests Gods people are in respect of God, Kings in respect of men. The righteous are Kings. Many righteous men have desired, &c. saith Matthew, chap. 13. 17. Many Kings, saith Luke, chap 10. 24. Indeed they are somewhat obscure Kings here, as was Melchisedech in the Land of Canaan: but Princes they are in all lands, Psa. 45. 16. and more excellent then their neighbours, let them dwell where they will, Prov. 12. 26.

λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν. A peculiar people] Gr. A people of purchase: such as comprehend, as it were, all Gods gettings, his whole flock that he makes any great reckoning of.

ἐξαγγείλητε. Shew forth the praises] Gr. Preach forth the vertues by our suitable practice. The picture of a dear friend should be hung up in a conspicuous place of the house; so should Gods holy image and grace in our hearts.

Vile latens virtus; quid enim submersa tenebris
Claud. Proderit? &c.

Hierom said that he did diligere Christum habitantem in Augustino, love Christ dwelling in Austin. So ought we to walk, that others may see and love Christ dwelling in us. He Cant. 5. ult. is totus desiderabilis, saith the spouse in the Canticles, all over desireable; and there is in him that which may well attract all hearts unto him.

Verse 10. Which in time past were not] If Plato thought it such a mercy to him that he was a man and not a woman, a Grecian and not a Barbarian, a Scholar to Socrates, and not to any other Philosopher, what exceeding great cause have we to praise God, that we are born Christians, not Pagans, Protestants not Papists, in these blessed daies of Reformation, &c.

Verse 11. As Pilgrims and strangers] Excellently doth Justin Martyr describe the Epist. ad Diog. Christians of his time; they inhabit their own countries, saith he, but as strangers; they partake of all as Citizens, and yet suffer all, as forraigners; every strange land is a Countrey to them, and every countrey a strange land.

And strangers abstain] Thoughts of death will be a death to our lusts, Lam. 1. 9. Her filthiness is in her skirts, and all because she remembreth not her last end. As the stroaking of a dead hand on the belly cureth a Tympany, and as the ashes of a viper applied to the part that is stung draws the venom out of it; so the thought of death is a death to sin.

From fleshly lusts] Those parts in our bodies that are the chiefest and nearest both subjects and objects of lust and concupiscence, are like unto the dung-gate, 1 Chron. 26. 16. whereby all the filth was cast out of the Temple. God hath placed them in our bodies, like snakes creeping out of the bottom of a dung-hill, and abased them in our eyes, that we might make a base account and estimation of the desires thereof, as one well observeth.

Which war against the soul] Only man is in love with his own bane (beasts are not so) and fights for those lusts that fight against the soul. And whereas some might say Capell of temptation. that other lusts fight against the soul, as well as fleshly lusts, it is answered that other lusts fight against the graces, but these more against the peace of the soul. Take we up therefore that Motto of Otho 2. Pacem cum hominibus cum vitiis bellum; Lets quarrel with our faults and not with our friends.

Verse 12. Having your conversation honest] Leading convincing lives the best arguments aggainst an Atheist-adversary.

They speak evil of you] See the Note on Mat. 5. 11.

Which they shall behold] Whiles they pry and spie into your courses (as the Greek ἐποπτεύοντες. word imports) to see what evil they can find out and fasten on.

In the day of visitation] When God shall effectually call and convert them. See the Note on Mat. 5. 16.

Verse 13. Submit to every ordinance] That is, Although the ordinance or govern-
Full. answ. to D. Fern. ment in the manner of its constitution be from man, yet because of the necessity of its institution it is from God; submit to it, though of man, for the Lords sake. For although it is called here Mans creature or ordinance, either in respect of man the subject by whom it is exercised, or Man the object, about whom it is conversant, or of Man the end, to whose emolument it tendeth: yet is is it still the gift and institution of God the primary Author, and provident ordainer. A Deo sanè est sive jubente, sive sinente, Of God it is surely, either so commanding or so suffering it to be, saith Augustin: *contra Faust. chy, that he wils and commands all Princes and Potentates to be ſubject to his Kingdome, and yet he wils and commands likewiſe that his Kingdome be ſubject to the Kingdoms of the world. Miſc. ep. ded.

Verſe 15. Te may put to ſilence] Gr. Muzzle, or halter up, button up their mouths, as we ſay. See the Note on Mat 22. 34. It is an old fetch of the devil, to perſwade the world that faithful people are Antimagiſtratical; theſe muſt be powerfully confuted by our contrary practice. φιμοῦν.

Verſe 16. As free] See the Note on Gal. 5. 13.

As free, and not uſing, &c.] Free in reſpect of our conſciences, exempted from humane powers, and yet as ſervants of God; bound in conſcience to obey him in obeying them, ſo far forth as he doth command us to obey them. B Downam.

For a cloak] Or cover. This were to put light not under a buſhel, but under a dunghil. Beza thinks the Apoſtle here alludes to that old cuſtome at Rome, that thoſe that were manumitted or ſet free, ſhould go with their heads covered, who before uſed to go bareheaded. Religion is an ill cloke of malicioufneſs: and will ſurely ſerve hypocritical Libertines, as the diſguiſe Ahab put on, and periſhed.

Verſe 17. Honour all men] As made in the image of God, as capable of heaven, and as having ſome ſpecial talent to trade with.

Honour the King] i. e. The Roman Emperour, who diſclaimed the name of a King, to avoid the hatred of the people, and yet ſought the full right of Kings, and ſo to deſtroy the liberty of the people. But Kings that will be honoured muſt be juſt, Ruling in the fear of God. 2 Sam. 23 3. Tortuoſis, curvis.

Verſe 18. To the froward] Croſs, crooked, ſtrample, fooliſh. The Greek word comes of an Hebrew word, that ſignifies a fool. σκολιὸς סכל

Verſe 19. This is thank-worthy] God accounts himſelf hereby gratified, as it were, and even beholding to ſuch ſufferers: this being the loweſt ſubjection, and the higheſt honour men can yield unto their maker. God will thank ſuch, which is condeſcenſio ſtupenda, a wonderful condeſcenſion. τοῦτο γὰρ χάρις ὅδε.

Verſe 20. For what glory is it] In peace-offerings there might be oil mixt, not ſo in ſin-offerings. In our ſufferings for Chriſt there is joy; not ſo when we ſuffer for our faults.

Verſe 21. Leaving us an example] Gr. A copy or pattern. Chriſts actions were either moral, or mediatory. In both we muſt imitate him. In the former by doing as he did. In the latter, by ſimilitude, tranſlating that to our ſpiritual life, which he did as Mediatour; as to die to ſin, to riſe to righteouſneſs, &c. and this not only by example (as Petrus Abeſardus held of old, and the Socinians at this day) but by vertue of Chriſts death and reſurrection working effectually in all his people; not as an exemplary cauſe only, or as a moral cauſe by way of meditation, but as having force obtained by it, and iſſuing out of it, even the Spirit that kils ſin, and quickens the ſoul to all holy practice. There is a ſtory of an Earl called Eleazar, a paſſionate Prince, that was cured of that diſordered affection by ſtudying of Chriſt and his patience. Crux pendentis cathedra docentis, Chriſt upon the croſs, is a Doctour in his Chair, where he reads unto us all a lecture of patience. The Eunuch, Act. 8. 32. was converted by this praiſe in Chriſt. It is ſaid of Hierome, that having read the godly life and Chriſtian death of Hilarion, he folded up the book, and ſaid, Well, Hilarion ſhall be the Champion whom I will follow. Should we not much more ſay ſo of Chriſt? ὑπογραμμὸν. Anton. Tract. 17. cap. 1. Paragr. 5. In vitae jun. apud Surium.

Verſe 22. Who did no ſin] S. Paul ſaith, He knew no ſin, 2 Cor. 5. 21. to wit, with a practical knowledge (we know no more then we practice) with an intellectual he did: for elſe he could not have reproved it.

Neither was guile found in his mouth] Which imports, that they ſought it. The wicked ſeek occaſion againſt the godly.

Verſe 23. But committed himſelf] Or, The whole matter. We alſo ſhall do our ſelves no diſſervice, by making God our Chancellour, when no law elſe will relieve us. And indeed the leſs a man ſtrives for himſelf, the more is God his Champion. He that ſaid, I ſeek not mine own glory, adds, but there is one that ſeeketh it, and judgeth. God takes his part ever, that fights not for himſelf.

Verſe 24. Who his own ſelf] Without any to help or uphold him, Iſa. 63. 5. he had not ſo much as the benefit of the Sun-light, when in that three hours darkneſs he was ſet upon by all the powers of darkneſs.

Ἀνήνεγκαν. Bare our sins] Gr. Bare them aloft. viz. When he climbed up his Cross, and nailed them thereunto. Surely he hath born our griefs, and carried our sorrows, Isa. 53. 4. He taketh away the sins of the world, Joh. 1. 29.

Ἀπογενόμενοι. That we being dead to sin] Or, Separated from sin, or unmade to it, cut off from it, the old frame being utterly dissolved.

By whose stripes] Or, Wales. This he mentioneth to comfort poor servants, whipt and abused by their froward Masters. Sanguis medici factus est medicina phrenetici, The Physicians blood became the sick mans salve. We can hardly believe the power of sword-salve. But here is a mystery that only Christian religion can assure us of that the wounding of one should be the cure of another.

Verse 25. As sheep] Then the which no creature is more apt to stray, less apt and able to return. The Ox knoweth his owner, &c.

Chap. III.

Verse 1. Be in subjection to your husbands]

YEt with a limitation; Subject the wife must be to her husbands lawful commands and restraints. It is too much that Plutarch lays as a law of wedlock on the wife, to acknowledge and worship the same gods, and none else, but those whom her husband doth. Serena the Empress suffered Martyrdom under her cruel husband Diocletian: and Elizabeth wife to Joachimus, the Prince Electour of Brandeburg, was forced to fly to the Court of Saxony, Anno Dom. 1527. from the perpetual imprisonment provided for her by her Popish husband (for receiving the Sacrament of the Lords supper in both kinds) and died in banishment.

κερδηθήσονται. Be won by the conversation] i. e. Be prepared for conversion; as Austins father and himself were, by the piety of his mother Monica. The Greek word for won signifieth gained; and seems to allude to those good servants, Mat. 25. who traded their talents, and doubled them with their good husbandry.

ἐποπτεύσαντες. Verse 2. Whiles they behold] Curiously pry into. Carnal men watch the carriages of professors, and spend many thoughts about them.

Your chaste conversation] When Livia the Empress was asked how had she got such a power over her husband that she could do any thing with him? She answered, Multâ modestiâ, by my much modesty. A prudent wife commands her husband by obeying.

Dio in Aug.

Coupled with fear] not slavish fear of blows, but reverent fear. 1. Of offending God, by using unlawful means to get their husbands love, as by plaiting of the hair, &c. 2. Of offending their husbands by immodesty or frowardness.

Verse 3. Whose adorning] Mundus muliebris. See Isa. 3. 18. Where the Prophet as punctually inveighs against this noble vanity, as if he had viewed the Ladies wardrobes in Jerusalem.

Let it not be that outward] Vestium curiositas, deformitatis mentium & morum indicium est, saith Bernard. Excessive neatness is a sign of inward nastiness. It was a true saying of wise Cato, Cultus magna cura, magna est virtutis injuria. They are never good that strive to be over-fine. Superfluous apparel saith Cyprian, is worse then whoredom. Lysander would not suffer his daughters to wear gorgeous attire; saying it would not make them so comely as common.

Lib. de cult. fem. Verse 4 But let it be hidden] Vestite vos serico pietatis, byssino sanctitatis, purpura pudicitiæ, Taliter pigmentatæ Deum habebitis amatorem. It is Tertullians counsel to young women, Cloth your selves, saith he, with the silk of piety, with the sattin of sanctity, with the purple of modesty; So shall you have God himself to be your suitor. Plutarch speaks of a Spartan woman that when her neighbours were shewing their apparel and jewels, she brought out her children, vertuous and well taught, and said, These are my ornaments and jewels.

In that which is not corruptible] Or, In the incorruption of a meek and quiet spirit, &c. a garment that will never be the worse for wearing, but the better. Some wives may seem to have been molten out of that salt pillar into which Lots wife was transformed; these as they please not God, so they are contrary to all men.

Of great price] God makes great reckoning of a quiet minde, because it is like himself. He promiseth earth to the meek, and heaven to the incorrupt or sincere, and pure in heart.

Verse 5. Who trusted in God] And therefore would not by unlawful means seek to get or keep their husbands love and favour; but trusted God for that. So Hezekiah trusted in God, and pulled down the brazen serpent, 2 Kings 18.4. 5. opposing his presence to all peril.

Verse 6 Calling him Lord] See here, how in a great heap of sin, God can finde out his own, and accept of it. There was no good word in all the whole sentence, but this, that she called her husband Lord. God is pleased to single out this, and set it as a precious diamond in a gold ring to Sarah's eternal commendation. So Heb. 11. 31. mention is made of Rahabs entertaining the spies, and not of the lye she told; God lays the finger of mercy on the scars of our sins, as that Limner in the story.

And are not afraid, &c.] Fear they must, vers. 2. and yet they must not. Fear God, but not their husbands undeserved checks or threats for obeying God. One fear must expell another, as one fire drives out another.

According to knowledge] Where should wisdom be but in the head? This must be shewed Uxoris vitium aut tollendo, aut tolerando, said Varro, either by curing, or at least covering his wives weaknesses.

As unto the weaker vessel] Glasses are to be tenderly handled; a small knock soon breaks them. So here. Vipera virus ob venerationem nuptiarum evomit, saith Basil. The Viper, for the honour of coupling with his mate, casts up his poison; and wilt not thou for the honour of marriage cast away thy harshness, roughness, cruelty to a consort? Et tu duritiem animi, tu scritatem, tu crudelitatem ob unionis reverentiam non deponis?

As being heirs] Souls have no sexes, Gal. 3. 28.

That your prayers be not hindered] Isaac prayed in the presence of his wife. This course of praying together, apart from others, being taken up by married couples, will much increase and spiritualize their affection one to another. But jarring will make them leave praying, or praying leave jarring.

Verse 8. Be courteous] Gr. Friendly-minded, ready to any good office. Christianity is no enemy to courtesie, but includes it. See the practise of it in Abraham, and the Hittites, Boaz and his reapers, the Angels and Apostles salutations, the Primitive Christians holy kiss, in use in Irenaus his time, and Tertullians, till taken away for the abuse it grew into; as likewise their love-feasts. φιλόφρονες.

Verse 9. railing for railing] Convitium convitio regerere, quid aliud est quam lutum luto purgare? saith one. To render railing for railing, is to think to wash off dirt with dirt.

That ye should inherit a blessing] Blessings by words, properly. They that will speak good words to men, shall hear good words from God; they shall have his good word for them in all places, and in the hearts of their greatest enemies, as Jacob and Job had. εὐλογίαν.

Verse 10. Love life] Man is ζῶον φιλόζωον, a creature that loves life, saith Aristotle. Who is the man that willeth life? saith David, Psal. 34. 12. And hereunto every man will be ready to answer, Ego, I do, as Austin observeth. But when the condition shall be added, Cohibe linguam, &c. Refrain thy tongue, &c. Refrain thy tongue, &c. then, saith he, scarce any will appear, or accept the motion.

And see good days] That is, Prosperous and peaceable days; for all the days of the afflicted are evil, Prov. 15. 15. a joyless life is no life. Rebecca was weary of her life, and so was Eliah when he sat under the Juniper. Multi etiam magni viri sub Elia Junipero sedent: It is many a good mans case.

Verse 11. Seek peace, and ensue it] A contentious man never wants wo; Ut habeas quietum tempus, perde aliquid, was a Proverb at Carthage, as Austin relates it; Et concedamus de jure ut careamus lite. For a quiet life let a man part with his right sometimes.

Verse 12. For the eyes of the Lord] Should not God see as well as hear, his children should want many things. We apprehend not all our own wants, and so cannot pray for relief of all. He of his own accord, without any Monitour is wont to aid us.

His ears are open unto, &c.] Gr. His ears are unto their prayers, q. d. though their prayers are so faint that they cannot come up to God, God will come down to them.

them. He can feel breath, when no voice can be heard, Lam. 3, 56. Fletus sæpè agitur non affatu.

Verse 13. And who is he that will, &c.] Natural conscience cannot but do homage to the image of God, stamped upon the natures and works of the godly: as we see in the carriage of Nebuchadnezzar and Darius toward Daniel. I have known some (saith a grave Divine) the first occasion of whose conversion was the observation of their stoutness under wrongs and oppressions, whom they have purposely persecuted with extreamest hate and malice.

M. Bolton.

2 Thes. 3. 3. Verse 14. But and if ye suffer] q. d. Say you meet with such unreasonable men made up of meer incongruities and absurdities, that will harm you for well doing, yet you shall be no losers.

Verse 15. Sanctifie the Lord God] Consider and conceive of him, as he stands described in the Scriptures, and as related to his people, resting upon his power, and love, for safety here, and salvation hereafter.

Ready always to give an answer] Gr. To make apology, a bold and wise profession of the truth, with due observation of just circumstances. To dissemble is ever a fault: but not to profess is then only a fault, when a man is silent, Intempestivè & loco minimè idoneo, at an unfit time and place. Let me be counted and called proud, or any thing, Modo impii silentii non arguar, said Luther, so I be not guilty of a sinful silence.

To every man that asketh] Christians should in this case stay till they are asked Cyprian reproveth the rashness of those in his time, that would go of their own accord to the Heathen Magistrates, professing themselves Christians; whereby they were put to death. This made one of the persecutors cry out, O miseri, si libet perire, num vobis rupes aut restes desunt? O wretches, can ye find no way else to dispatch your selves, but that I must be thus troubled with you? Christ, saith Cyprian, would have us rather confess, then profess our religion. Now, he confesseth, that doth it being asked: as he professeth, that doth it of his own free accord.

A reason of the hope] Not every trifling question, or malicious cavil. Christ answered the Governour not a word to some things, and yet he witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate, 1 Tim. 6. 13.

With meekness and fear] Lest you should dishonour a good cause by an ill carriage. Austin professeth this was it that heartned him, and made him to triumph in his former Manichism, that he met with feeble Opponents, and such as his nimble wit was easily able to overturn. Carolostadius also had the right on his side; but was not able to make it out, and maintain it against Luther.

Verse 16. Having a good conscience] Which you cannot have, if you deny or but dissemble the truth. George Marsh Martyr being examined before the Earl of Darby kept himself close in the point of the Sacrament. But after his departure, thus he writes. I departed much more troubled in my spirit then before, because I had not with more boldness confess'd Christ, but in such sort as mine adversaries thereby thought they should prevail against me; whereat I was much grieved; for hitherto I went about as much as in me lay, to rid my self out of their hands, if by any means without open denying of Christ and his Word, that could be done, &c.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1419.

As of evil-doers] Malefactors not Martyrs.

They may be ashamed that falsly accuse] This is an excellent way of stopping an open mouth. Oh these real apologies are very powerful. Thus did the Primitive Christians plead for themselves, Non aliunde noscibiles quam de emendatione vitiorum pristinorum, saith Tertullian, known from all others by their reformed lives. Thus did those old Protestants the Waldenses; In moribus sunt compositi & modesti, &c. said that Popish Inquisitour their professed adversary. Their doctrine, said he, is naught, but their lives are unblameable. The mans life (saith Erasmus concerning Luther) is approved of all men: his veriest adversaries cannot accuse him for any thing in point of practice. Lewis King of France, having received certain complaints against the Protestants of Merindol and Chabriers, sent certain to enquire into the business, and hearing what they related to him, he swore a great oath they were better men then either himself was, or any other of his subjects.

Tert. ad Scapulam.

Nec hostes repertant quod calumnientur. Anno Dom. 1513.

That falsly accuse your good conversation] We should so carry your selves, saith Hierom, ut nemo de nobis male loqui absq; mendacio possit: that no man might speak evil of us without a manifest lye.

Verse 17. That ye suffer for Well-doing] The cause, and not the pain makes the Martyr. Together with the Lord Cromwel was beheaded (in Henry the eighths time) the Lord Hungerford, neither so Christianly suffering, nor so quietly dying for his offence committed against nature. What a sad thing was that related by Eusebius, that the cruel persecution under Docleſian was occasioned chiefly by the petulancy, pride, and contentions of the Pastours and Bishops? which gave occasion to the tyrant to think that Christian religion was no better then a wretched device of wicked men. Lactantius to the like purpose crieth out, Nunc male audiunt caſtiganturque vulgò (christiani, quod aliter quam ſapientibus convenit vivant, & vitia ſub obtentu nom nis celent, &c. Christians are hardly spoken of, and deeply censured by the vulgar, because they live not as becometh wise men; but cover their vices under pretence of their religion. Speeds Chron. De opific. Dei, proam.

Verse 18. That he might bring us] To reconcile and bring men again to God, was the main end of Christs coming and suffering. This is the wonderment of Angels, torment of devils, &c.

The just for the unjust] O the vile dulness of our hearts, that cannot be duly affected herewith! Behold here was piety scourged for the impious mans sake: wisdom derided for the fools sake, truth denied for the lyars sake, justice condemned for the unjust mans sake, mercy afflicted for the cruel mans sake, life dies for the dead mans sake. What a suffering was that, when the Just suffereth for the unjust, with the unjust, upon unjust causes, under unjust Judges, and by unjust punishments? &c. Euripides saith its is but righteous, that they that do things not good, should suffer things not pleasant: But what had that innocent Lamb of God done?

Verse 19. He went and preached] Righteousness, i. e. Repentance, 2 Pet. 2. 5. and the faith of the Gospel, 1 Pet. 4. 6. whereby some of those many that perished in the waters, arrived at heaven. Nunquam ſerò, ſi ſeriò. Christ went to them as an Embassadour sent by his Father, and spake to their hearts.

Verse 20. Which some times were disobedient] Gr. Unperſwadable, unconſellable. They jeared where they should have feared, and thought Noah no wiser then the Prior of S. Bartholomews in London, who upon a vain prediction of an idle Astrologer, went and built him a house at Harrow on the hill, to secure himself from a supposed flood, foretold by that Astrologer. Holinshed.

Verse 21. Baptism doth also now save] It is of permanent use, and effectual to seal up salvation whensoever a man believes and repents. Hence we are once baptized for all. See Ephes. 5. 26. Tit. 3. 5. The Popes decrees say, That Confirmation is of more value then Baptism, and gives the holy Ghost more plentifully and effectually. How fitly might the Glos have set upon this decree Palea, or Hoc non credo, as they use to do, when any thing in the Decrees pleaseth them not?

Not the putting away] That none bear himself bold upon his Christendom: Unregenerate Israel is to God as Ethiopia, Amos 9. 7. A man may go to hell with baptismal water on his face.

But the answer] The Stipulation, or confident interrogation, such as is that of the Apostle, Rom. 8. 33, 34, 35. and of Jeremy pleading with God, Chap., 12. 1. and reasoning the case with him. David from his circumcision promised himself victory over that uncircumcised Philistim; so may we from our baptism, against al spiritual wickednesses; bring but this Confident answer of a good conscience, and the devil will never be able to abide by it. Luther maketh mention of a certain holy Virgin, who usually quenched the devils fiery darts with the water of baptism. For whensoever he tempted her to evil, she confidently answered Christiana ſum, I am a Christian, I have been baptised, and therein promised to renounce the devil, and all his works, &c. For to that custom of asking the party to be baptized, and taking his answer, (Credis? credo: abrenuncias? abrenuncio) the Apostle seemeth here to allude Or, as others are of opinion, to the manner of Iohns baptism wherein people confessed (renounced) their sins, and asked him what they should do, Luke 3. 10. ἐπερώτημα. Intellexit hoſtis ſtatim virtutem baptiſmi, &c. & fugit ab ea. Luth. ἐπερώτων. ἐπερώτημα.

Verse 22. Angels and authorities] Psal. 68. 17. The word rendered Angels, signifieth Seconds, as being second to Christ, or next to him. See Dan. 10. 13.

Chap. IV.

Verse 1. Christ hath suffered]

AS Chap. 3. 18.

In the flesh] In humane nature; so must we suffer in sinful nature, subduing it to God, and ceasing from sin, nailing it and nailing it to the cross of Christ. First have sin to the cross of Christ: force it before the Tree on which he suffered; tis such a sight as sin cannot abide. It will begin to dye within us upon the first sight of Christ upon the cross. For the cross of Christ accuseth sin, shameth it, and by a secret vertue feedeth upon the very heart of it. Secondly, Use sin as Christ was used when he was made sin for us; Lift it up, and make it naked by confession to God. And then pierce, 1. The hands of it, in respect of operation, that it may work no more. 2. The feet of it, in respect of progression, that it go no further. 3. The heart in respect of affection, that it may be loved no longer, &c.

Verse 2. That he no longer, &c.] To spend the span of this transitory life after the ways of ones own heart, is to perish for ever.

Verse 3. For the time past of our life may suffice us] We may every one say with Austin, Nimis serò te amavi Domine. It should be a burden to our souls, that we begin no sooner to love God.

In lasciviousness, lusts, &c.] The true picture of a Pagan conversation, which yet is too too common among those that call themselves Christians. The world is now grown perfectly prophane, and can play on the Lords day without book; making it as Bacchus Orgies, rather then Gods holy day, with piping, dancing, drinking, drabbing, &c. We may say as once Alsted of his Germans, that if the Sabbath-day should be named according to their observing of it, Dæmoniacus potiùs quam Dominicus diceretur, it should be called not Gods-day, but the devils. Alsted Encycl.

Excess of wine] Or, Red and rich faces, as they call them. ἐυφρυγίαις.

Revellings] Stinks saith the Syriack: Drunkards are stinkards. As Luther called the Swenck-feldians Stink-feldians, from the ill savour of their opinions. Tacitus tells us that among the old Germans it was no disgrace counted to continue drinking and spewing night and day. κώμοις. Diem noctemq; continuare potando.

Banquettings] Gr. Compotations, or good fellow-meetings; some render it bibbings, sippings, tiplings, sitting long at it, though not to an alienation of the mind. How much more when they leave not till they have drunk the three Outs first; viz. Wit out of the head, Money out of the purse, and Ale out of the pot? πότοις.

And abominable Idolatries] Some idolatries then, say the Papists, are not abominable. A sweet inference. That all Papists are Idolaters, D. Rainolds hath plainly and plentifully proved in his learned work De idololatria Romana, never yet answered. Weston writeth that his head ached in reading it. But what a poor shift is that of Vasquez, expressly to maintain that the second Commandment belonged to the Jews only: as holding it impossible to answer our arguments against their Image-worship? Other Popish writers utterly disannul the second Commandment, making it a member of the first; and so, retaining the words, they destroy the sense and interpretation.

Verse 4. They think it strange] Gr. That they think it a new world, marvelling what is come to you alate. It is I, said the harlot; but it is not I, said the convert. ξενίζονται. At ego non sum. οὐ συντρέχετε.

Into the same excess] Gr. Bubling or boiling, as the raging sea, foaming out its own filth.

Verse 5. Who shall give account] Of their ungodly deeds and hard speeches, Jude 15. Angels did their first execution in the world upon luxurious Sodomites; they will be very active doubtless against such at the last day. See 2 Pet. 2. 10. and mark that word, Chiefly.

Verse 6. For, for this cause] See the Note on 1 Pet. 3. 19.

That they might be judged] Either by God chastising them, 1 Cor. 11. 32. or by themselves, vers. 31. The Gospel melts the hearts of Gods elect with voluntary grief for sin, it makes them condemn themselves in the flesh.

But

But live according to God] The Father of ſpirits, with whom the ſpirits of juſt men departed are made perfect, Heb. 12. 23. Euſebius and Auſtin make mention of certain Arabians, who ſaid that the ſoul dies with the body, and revives not again till the reſurrection of the body. This old hereſie is now, among many others, digged out of the grave, and held by certain Sectaries amongſt us. Euſeb l. 2. c. 29. Aug. tom. 6. de hæreſ.

Verſe 7. Be ye therefore ſober, &c.] To be ſober in prayer (ſaith one) is to pray with due reſpect to Gods Majeſty, without trifling or vain babling; To let our words be few, Eccleſ. 5. 3. Alſo it is keep Gods counſel, not to be proud or boaſt of ſucceſs, or ſpeak of the ſecret ſweetneſs of Gods love without calling: It is to conceal the familiarity of God in ſecret. Or, it is to ſubmit our will to the will of God; being well pleaſed that He is any way glorified, though we be not every way gratified.

And watch unto prayers] Againſt dulneſs of body, drouſineſs of ſpirit, Satanical ſuggeſtions, diſtractive motions, which elſe will muſter and ſwarm in the heart like the Flies of Ægypt.

Verſe 8. Charity ſhall cover] This is meant of mutual love, whereby we forgive offences one to another, and not that which ſhould juſtifie us before God in a Popiſh ſenſe, as appears by the precedent words, and by Prov. 10. 12.

Verſe 9. Without grudgings] Without ſhucking and hucking. See 2 Cor. 8. 12. with the Note there.

Verſe 10. Even ſo miniſter] Clouds when full, pour down, and the ſpouts run, and the eaves ſhed, and the preſſes over-flow, and the Aromatical trees ſweat out their precious and ſoveraign oyls, and every learned Scribe brings out his rich treaſure, &c. The manifeſtation of the ſpirit is given to every man to profit withall, 1 Cor. 12. 7. There are ſome that make it their chief work proficere potius quam prodeſſe, to inform themſelves, rather then to inſtruct others, to know, then to teach. Syneſius inveighs againſt a ſort of ſuch in his times, as having a treaſure of rare abilities in them, would aſſoon part with their hearts as with their conceptions: the canker of whoſe great skill ſhall be a ſwift witneſs againſt them. Cardan ſpeaketh of one that had a receipt that would ſuddenly and certainly diſſolve the ſtone in the bladder; and concludes of him that he was undoubtedly damned, becauſe he never revealed it before he died, to any one. Let men be ready to communicate the good they have, as the Moon doth her borrowed light, as the Stars are ſtill in motion for the good of others; as the heart receiving ſpirits from the liver, miniſtreth them to the brain, and the brain to the other parts of the body. Non dubito quin iſte ſit apud inferos, &c.

Verſe 11. If any man ſpeak] i. e. Preach. Every ſound is not muſick, ſo neither is every Pulpit diſcourſe preaching.

As the oracles of God] Thoſe lively and life-giving oracles, the holy Scriptures. Theſe he muſt expound with all gravity and ſincerity, not ſeeking himſelf, not ſeeking himſelf, nor ſetting forth his own wit and eloquence, ſo putting the ſword of the Spirit into a velvet ſcabbard, that it cannot prick and pierce the heart. Loquamur verba Scripturæ (ſaith Ramus) utamur ſermone Spiritus ſancti; denique divinam ſapientiam & linguam noſtrâ infantiâ & ſophiſticâ ne corrigamus, i. e, Let us ſpeak the very words of the Scripture, let us uſe the ſpeech of the holy Spirit; and not think to correct the divine wiſdom and eloquence with our babling and ſophiſtry. It is not for us to wit-wanton it with God: his holy things muſt be handled ſanctè magis quam ſcitè (as he once told the wanton Veſtal) that is with fear and reverence, rather then with wit and dalliance. Acts 7. 38.

Which God giveth] Liberally and magnifically. χορηγεῖ.

Verſe 12. Think it not ſtrange] Ne tanquam hoſpites percellamini. Stand not wondering, and as if ſtruck into a maze. Fain would this fleſh make ſtrange of that which the Spirit doth embrace (ſaith M. Saunders Martyr, in a letter to his wife.) O Lord how loth is this loitering ſluggard to paſs forth in Gods path. It fantaſieth forſooth much fear of fray-bugs. And were it not for the force of faith which pulleth it forward by the rein of God moſt ſweet promiſe, and of hope which pricks on behind, great adventures there were of faiming by the way. But bleſſed, and everlaſtingly bleſſed be our heavenly Father, &c. Act. and Mon. fol 1360.

Concerning the fiery trial] John Brown of Aſhford, through the cruel handling of Arch-

Archbishop Warrham, and Fisher Bishop of Rochester was so pitiously intreated (saith M. Fox) that his bare feet were set upon the hot burning coals, to make him deny his faith: which notwithstanding he would not do, but patiently abiding the pain, continued in the Lords quarrel unremoveable. See the like of Rose Allen, Act. and Mon. 1820.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1177.

As though some strange thing] Fore-cast afflictions. which being fore-seen come no whit the sooner, but far the easier: It is a labour well lost, if they come not, well spent if they do: whereas coming upon the sudden, they finde weak minds secure, make them miserable, leave them desperate. Bishop Latimer ever affirmed, that the preaching of the Gospel would cost him his life, to the which he no less chearfully prepared himself, then certainly was perswaded that Winchester was kept in the Tower for the same purpose; and the event did too truly prove the same. Being sent for to London by a pursuivant, and coming through Smithfield, he merrily said, That Smithfield had long groaned for him. To the Leiutenant of the Tower he said, You look I think, that I should burn; but except you let me have some fire, I am like to deceive your expectation: for I am like here to starve for cold.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1579.

Verse 13. But rejoyce] As the Apostles did, Acts 5. 41. See the Note there.

Inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christs sufferings] So they are called. 1. Because they are for his sake. 2. Because he suffereth with us; though not with a sense of pain, yet with a sense of pitty; for in all our afflictions he is afflicted, 3. We fill up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ, &c. Col. 1. 24. See the Note there.

Ἀγαλλιώμενοι. With exceeding joy] Gr. Dancing a galliard, Leaping Levalto's, lifting up your heads, because your redemption draweth nigh. Vincentius laughing at his tormentors, said that death and tortures were to Christians Jocularia & ludicra, matters of sport and pastime; and walking upon hot burning coals, he boasted that he walked upon roses; Other Martyrs said, that they felt no more pain in the fire then if they lay upon a bed of Down. Constantine embraced Paphnutius, and kissed his lost eye; So will Christ deal at the last day by his suffering servants.

Luther.

μακάριοι. Verse 14. Happy are ye] See the Note on Mat. 5. 11, 12. The word signifies, Ye are out of harms-way; out of the reach of danger.

ἀναπαύ. Resteth upon you]. With great delight and content. How strangely were the holy Martyrs spiritualized and elevated, carried out of themselves, and beyond themselves, as were easie to instance? We read of some godly men so overwhelmed with joy, that they have cried out, Hold Lord; stay thine hand, I can bear no more; like weak eyes that cannot bear toogreat a light. The Spirit of Glory and of God is by the Syriack Interpreter rendred the glorious Spirit of God.

Resteth upon you] sc. by divine abode or dwelling, which the Hebrews call Shechinah. The heart of a believer reproached for the name of Christ is no private place; but a place where God taketh pleasure. It is the house of God; and over against it is the gate of heaven. He seems here to allude to Isa. 4. 5.

Verse 15. As a busie body] Gr. A bishop in another mans Diocess, a pragmatical person that medleth with other mens matters without call or commendation.

Verse 16. Suffer as a Christian] Under the Emperor Antoninus the Philosopher, there fell out a very bitter storm of persecution in France, which swallowed up sundry Martyrs, as Maturus, Pothenus, Attalus and Blandina: which good woman in the midst of all her sufferings, oft cried out, Christiana sum, I am a Christian. By which word she gathered new strength, and became more then a Conqueress. So Sabina, an other glorious Roman Martyr, crying out when she was in prison, and being asked by the Jailour, how she would endure the fire next day, that made now so much a do in her travel? Very well, said she, I doubt not; for now I suffer as a sinner, but then I shall suffer as a Christian. They were wont to say of cowards in Rome, that there was nothing Roman in them. I would we had not cause to say of many Christians, that there is nothing Christian in them. He, and he only is a right Christian, and can quit himself accordingly both in doing and dying for Christ (if called thereunto) whose person is united to Christ by the ligament of a lively faith, and whose nature is elevated by the spirit of regeneration; and whose principles, practices, and ayms are divine and supernatural.

ashamed of. He was no ashamed of us, when we had never a rag to our backs, nay when we were in our blood, in our blood, in our blood, and no eye pitied us. &c. Ezek. 16.

Let him glorify God] viz. for his great preferment, Phil. 1. 28. See the Note there.

Verse 17. Judgement must begin] The mortality at Corinth began at the believers, 1 Cor. 11. 30. Infidels scaped Scot-free. Gods cup is first sent to Jerusalem. There was bread in Moab, when there was none in Israel, Ruth 1. 1. The stormy shower lighteth first on the high hils: and having washed them, setleth with all the filth in the valleys.

Verse 18. Scarcely be saved] Hard and scarce; not at all from outward miseries (whereof he is sure to have his back burden) and not without somewhat a do from hell torments. The wise Virgins had no oyl to spare: the twelve Tribes served God instantly and constantly day and night, and all little enough, Acts 26. 7.

Where shall the ungodly, &c. Surely no where: not before Saints and Angels for holiness is their trade. Not before God, for he is of more pure eyes, &c. Not before Christ: for he shall come in flaming fire rendering vengeance. Not in heaven, for its an undefiled inheritance, &c.

Verse 19. Commit the keeping,] As a precious depositum. So did our Saviour both in his life time, 1 Pet. 2. 23. and at his death, Luke 23. 46. So did Stephen and all the holy Martyrs after him. Archb. Cranmer oft repeated these words in the flame, Lord Jesu, receive my spirit. A certain Spanish Monk that stood by and heard him, ran to a Nobleman there present, and cryed out that Cranmer dyed in great desperation, ratus desperationis fuisse voces, as conceiving those to be words of despair.

As unto a faithful] Who will rather unmake all, then we shall miscarry. And doth still manage all occurences to the glory of his name, and the good of those that trust in him. Psal. 124. 8.

CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Who am also an Elder]

GR. A fellow-Elder, not a Commander, a Lord paramount, a Compeer and Consort to the blessed Trinity, as Pope Leo the first, and Nicolas the third blasphemously said he was. Leo 1. Petrum in consortium individuæ Trinitatis assumptum fatuit.

Verse 2. Feed the flock] being both learned and loving. The Greek word for a shepherd signifieth one that earnestly desireth after his sheep.

Feed the flock] That is, rule them, say the Popes Janizaries. True it is the word signifieth sometimes to govern: usually to feed: but they catch at government, let go feeding. ποιμαίνειν, quasi ἀπὸ τῶν οἰῶν ἀιδεῖν.

Not by constraint, but willingly] It is with the Pastors of Germany for most part, saith Melancthon, as with him in Plautus, that said, Ego non servio libenter; herus meus me non habet, libenter tamen utitur me ut lippis oculis. I serve of no good will, my master also hath as little good will to use my service; and yet he makes such use of me as he doth of some eyes, which he must have or none.

Not for filthy lucre] As your Church-choppers, and money-changers, that take up the Ministry onely as a trade to pick a living out of it. We preach the Gospel amongst us, saith a Popish writer, tantum ut nos pascat & vestiat, meerly for food and raiment. Christs faithful under-shepherds, though as men, they have natural necessities and relations, and as Labourers in the word and doctrine, they have need of communicating with others by way of giving and receiving of this worlds good, yet they have higher aims, which of ready mind they duely prosecute, &c. There is a worm called Clerus, that destroyeth honeycombs; so doth the Popish Clergy the Lords inheritance. But Clerus Angliæ was wont to be stupor Mundi, the worlds wonder for height of holiness and depth of learning.

Verse 3. Neither as being Lords] About the year 1620. the Clergy and Laity of England set themselves against the Popes exactions; and when the Legat alledged that all Churches were the Popes, Magister Leonardus made answer, Tuitione non fruitione, defensione non dissipatione. Jac. Ravius in vit. Pontif.

Verse 4. Ye shall receive a crown] A crown imports perpetuity, plenty, dignity, the height of humane ambition. Quarta perennis erit, was Sir Thomas Bodly his posie. Manet ultima cœlo, was Henry the thirds of France, who was first crowned King of Poland. See the Note on James 1. 12.

Verse 5. Yea all of you be subject] In regard of Love and modesty, not of change and confusion of offices.

ἐγκομβώσασθε Be cloathed with humility] The Greek word imports, that humility is the riband or string that ties together all those precious pearls, the rest of the graces; if this string break, they are all scattered. Humility, as charity; is the band of perfection; yea the κόμβος word here used signifies not only alligare, but innodare, say some; to tie knots as delicate and curious women use to do of ribands to adorn their heads or bodies; as if humility were the knot of every vertue, and the grace of every grace. Contrariwise, how ugly and unseemly is pride on the back of honour, and head of learning, face of beauty! &c.

M. Caudrey. Chrysostom calleth humility the root, mother, nurse, foundation and band of all vertues.

Σπαυεσφυλάκιον. Basil the storehouse, treasury of all good.

God resisteth] See the Note on James 4.6. As pride resisteth God in a special maner: so God in a special manner resisteth it.

And giveth grace] i. e. Honour and respect: as appears by the opposition, and by Prov. 3. 34, 35.

Verse 6 Under the mighty hand of God] If God can blow us to destruction, Iob. 4. 9. nod us to destruction, Psal. 18. 16. what is the weight of that mighty hand of his, that spans the heavens, and holds the earth in the hollow of them?

That he may exalt you] The lower the ebb, the higher is the tide. A deluge of sorrows may assault us, but they shall exalt us. And the lower the foundation of vertue is laid, the higher shall the roof of glory be over-laid.

In due time] In the opportunity of time, in a fit season. The very Turks, though remorseless to those that bear up, yet receive humiliation with much sweetness.

Verse 7. Casting all your care] Your carking care, your care of diffidence. I will now with you sing away care (said John Careless Martyr in a letter to M. Philpot) for now my soul is turned to her old rest again, and hath taken a sweet nap in Christs lap. I have cast my care upon the Lord which careth for me, and will be Careless, according to my name. It is our work (saith Another) to cast care: it is Gods work to take care. Let us not, by our soul dividing thoughts, take his work out of his hand.

Acts and Mon. fol. 1743.

Verse 8. Your adversary the devil] Satan envies our condition that we should enjoy that Paradise that he left, the comforts he once had. Hence he disturbs us, and is restless, out of his infinite hatred of God and goodness: as the Scorpion still puts forth his sting, and as the Leopard bearet such a natural hatred against men, that if he see but a mans picture, he flies upon it, and tears it: Annibal, whether he conquered, or was conquered, never rested. Satan is over-overcome, and yet he walks up and down seeking to devour: he commits the sin against the holy Ghost every day, and shall lie lowest in hell: every soul that he drew thither by his temptation, shall lie upon him, and press him down as a millstone under the unsupportable wrath of God. The word here rendred an Ἀντίδικος. adversary, properly signifies an adversary at Law. Against whom we have an Advocate Jesus Christ the just one, 1 Ioh. 2.2. who appears for us, Heb. 9. 24. to non-suit all accusations, and to plead our cause. The devil the accuser oft makes that to be treason in the Saints, that is but petty larceny. In prosperity he makes us lay our hearts to near it; in adversity to lay it too near our hearts. He is ever assaultings us, and is therefore called ὁ περιπατῶν the Tempter in the present tense; not lazy at his business, but ever in motion for some mischief to us. Si per anticam ejicias, per posticam denuo solet irrepere, if you throw him out at street-door, he will creep in again at the back-door.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the second Epistle general of S. Peter.

Chap. I.

Verse 1. A servant]

THe Pope who will needs stile himself, A servant of servants, is herein the successour not of Peter, but of cursed Cham. He stamps in his coyn That Nation and countrey that will not serve thee, shall be rooted out, and so bewraies his putid hypocrisie.

Like precious faith] Precious as gold tried in the fire; that maketh rich, Rev. 3. 18. And like precious (though of different degrees) in regard of 1. The Author God, 2. The object, Christ. 3. The means of working it, the Spirit and Word. 4. The end of it, salvation. 5. The essential property of it, of handfasting us to Christ. A child may hold a ring in his hand, as well though not as fast as a man. Let it be our care to be faithful in weakness, though weak in faith; Let that faith we have be right, be of price, though not of so great price, though not like precious to such and such eminent believers. Suppose a simple man should get a stone and strike fire with it, and thence conclude it a precious stone; why, every flint or ordinary stone will do that. So to think one hath precious faith because he can be sober, just, chast, liberal, &c. Why ordinary Heathens can do this; A man may be undone by buying a false commodity at an unreasonable rate.

Through the righteousness of God] i. e. of Christ; and it is so called, not because it is the righteousness of the Godhead, but of him that is God.

Verse 2. Through the knowledge] There is not a new notion, or a further enlargement of saving knowledge, but it brings some grace and peace with it. All the grace that a man hath, it passeth through the understanding; and the difference of stature in Christianity Christianity grows from different degrees of knowledge. Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, Joh. 1. 17.

Verse 3. To glory and vertue] To glory as the end, to vertue as the means. The very Heathens made their passage to the temple of honour thorow the temple of vertue. Do worthily, and be famous, Ruth 4. 11.

Verse 4. Exceeding great and precious] Every precious stone hath an egregious vertue in it; so hath every promise. The promises, saith one, are a precious book, every leaf drops myrrhe and mercy. The weak Christian cannot open, read, apply it; Christ can, and will for him. Cardan. Subtil. l. 7.

That by these ye might be partakers] As the Sun when it applies it's beams to a filthy disposed matter, and staies upon it, begins to beget life and motion, and makes a living creature; so do the promises applied to the heart make a new creature. See 2. Cor. 3. 6.

Of the divine nature] That is, of those divine qualities, called elsewhere The image of God, the life of God, &c. whereby we resemble God, not only as a picture doth a man in outward lineaments, but as the child doth his father in countenance and conditions. It was no absurd speech of him that said, That the high parts that that are seen in heroical persons, do plainly shew that here is a God. Neither can I here but insert the saying of another, Well may grace be called the divine nature; for as God brings light out of darkness, comfort out of sorrow, riches out of poverty, and glory out of shame; so doth grace turn the dirt of disgrace into gold, &c. As Moses his hand it turns a serpent into a rod. In fine, to be made partaker of the divine nature, noteth two things, saith a reverend man; First a fellowship with God in his holiness; the purity which is eminently and infinitely in Gods most holy nature, is formally or secundum modum creature fashioned in us 2. A fellowship with God in his blessedness, viz. in the beatifical vision and brightness of glory. D. Reynolds.

Verse 5. And besides this] q. d. As God hath given you all things pertaining to life and godliness, and hath granted you exceeding great and precious promises, so must you reciprocate, by giving all diligence, or making all haste, that ye be not taken with your task undone. Acti agamus.

Add to your faith] Faith is the foundation of the following graces; Indeed they are all in faith radically. Every grace is but faith exercised. To faith must be added vertue, i. e. holy conversation; lest we be counted and called Solifidians. It was the counsel of Francis Spira to those about him, Learn all of me, to take heed of severing faith and obedience. I taught justification by faith, but neglected obedience; therefore is this befallen me.

And to virtue knowledge;] For the regulating of our obedience, that we go not blindling to work, that we may perform a reasonable or intelligible service. For without knowledge the mind is not good; and he that (not understanding his way) hasteth with his feet, sinneth; the faster he runs, the further he is out. The Samaritans service was rejected, because they worshipped they knew not what. The Romans were full of goodness, because full of knowledge. Prov. 19 2. Rom. 15. 14.

Add] Gr. Link them hand in hand, as Virgins in a dance. Or, Provide your selves of this rich furniture; one grace strengtheneth another, as stones do in an arch. ἐπιχορήγησατε.

Verse 6. And to knowledge, temperance] That ye be wise to sobriety, not curiously searching into those things whereof ye can neither have proof nor profit. Some are as wise as Galileus, who used perspective glasses to descry mountains in the Moon; and lest they should not be reputed to know something unknown to others, they profess skill beyond the Periphery of possible knowledge.

And to temperance, patience] Those that will be temperate as aforesaid, and not pass the bounds of sobriety in searching after curiosities, shall be looked upon by the Wits of the world, as dull fellows (Mr. Perkins was esteemed by Mr. Bolton afore his conversion, a dry Preacher, &c.) and therefore they have need of patience. Only they must add to their Patience, godliness] In the power of it: not suffering themselves to be mocked out of their religion. Moderation in this case is but mopishness. And though in our own cause we must shew all long sufferance, yet when Gods glory is concerned, it is our duty to be blessedly blown up with zeal for his name; as Moses was at the sight of the golden Zuing. Epist. golden calf; and as Zuinglius told Servetus, taxing him for his sharp invectives against him; in other things, saith he, I can bear as much as another; but in case of Gods dishonour, I have no patience.

Verse 7. And to godlyness, brotherly kindness] Zeal for God should eat us up, but not eat up our love to Gods people. Fire purgeth gold, but burneth it not: the fire of zeal may be warming, comforting, not scalding or scorching. Moses was angry with the people, but prayed for them. Christ was angry with the Pharisees, but grieved withall for the hardness of their hearts, Mark 3. 5.

And to brotherly kindness, &c.] Love we must all men, but especially the family of faith, as our Saviour loved the young man, but not so as he did Lazarus.

Mar. 10. 21. Joh. 11. 3.

Verse 8. If these things be in you] What God doth for us, he doth by grace in us. And it is the growing Christian that is the assured Christian. Whilest we are yet adding to every heap, we shall be both actuosi & fructuosi; and so get more abundant entrance, and further into the kingdom of Christ.

Verse 9. But he that lacketh these] Those that add not to their stock of grace, shall have no comfort either from the time past, for they shall forget they were purged from their sins, or from thoughts of the time to come, for they shall not be able to see things far off, to ken their interest in the kingdom of heaven.

μυωπάζοντες. Cannot see far off] Being pur-blinde, blinking, Luscioſi, qui ſiquando oculorum aciem intendunt ut certiùs aliquid cernant, minùs vident quam antè, saith Vives. If weak-sighted men look wishly upon a thing, they see it no whit the better, but much the worse.

And hath forgotten] As if he had been dipt in the lake of Lethe, and not in the laver of baptism. Divers of the Spanish converts in America forget not only their vow, but their very names that they received, when they were baptized.

Verse 10. Give diligence] Say not here as Antipater King of Macedony did, when one presented him a book treating of happiness, ὁ σχολάζω, I am not at leisure. But do this one thing necessary, with all expedition. Do it also with all thy might, with utmost intention of affection and contention of action; so to shew thy seriousness in a point of so great importance. Thy bed is very soft, or thy heart very hard, if thou canst sleep soundly in an uncertain condition; I mean till thy salvation be secured and settled to thee: till that entrance be ministred unto thee abundantly into Christs everlasting kingdom, ver. 11. that thou maist go to heaven alacri animo, ac plenâ fiduciâ (as Luther speaketh) with a chearful mind and full assurance; not of hope onely (as the Papists ignorantly distinguish) but of faith too: of hope unfaileable, and of faith unfained; the highest degree whereof is Plerophoria, or full assurance.

Your calling and election] We must not go (saith one) to the University of election, before we have been at the Grmmar-school of Vocation: First, we are to begin below at our sanctification, before we can climbe to the top of Gods councel, to know our election. This must be calculated by that.

T.C. on Colos.

Sure] Some coppies have it, Sure by good works: and indeed these settle the soul, 1 Cor. 15. 58. as a stake, the more it is struck into the ground, the faster it sticks.

Ye shall never fall] Stumble ye may; but he that stumbles and fals not, gets ground.

Verse 11. Ministred unto you abundantly] Ye shall go gallantly into heaven, not get thither as many do, with hard shift, and much ado. A ship may make a shift to get into the harbour, but with anchors lost, cables rent, sails torn, mast broken; another comes in with sails and flags up, with trumpets sounding, and comes bravely into the haven: so do fruitful and active Christians into Christs Kingdome.

Into the everlasting Kingdome] Not so into this world, which is like a candlestick, where ye may see Orchards and gardens curiously drawn, but ye cannot enter into them.

Verse 12. I will not be negligent] Ministers must carefully watch and catch at all opportunities of benefitting the people. D. Taylor the Martyr preached at Hadley his charge on any day, as oft as he could get the people together: and once a fort-night at least went to the alms-house, and there exercised his charity both spiritual and corporal.

Acts and Mon. fol 1389.

Verse 13. To stir you up] Gr. To rouse you and raise you, ex veterno torporis, teporis & oblivionis. Grace in the best is like a dul-sea-coal-fire; which, if not stirred up, though it want no fuel, will yet easily go out of itself.

Verse 14. I must put off] See the Note on 2 Cor. 5. 1. What is this life, but a spot of time betwixt two eternities? Our tents shall be taken down.

Verse 15. After my decease] Gr. Min. out-going, or passage to heaven. The Apostle in this expression hath respect doubtless to that, Luke 9. 31. Dun. 6. 15. refers to Psal. 2. 1. ἔξοδον.

To have these things alwaies &c.] Dilexi virum (said Theodosius concerning Ambrose) I could not but love the man exceedingly for this, that when he died, he was more solicitous of the Churches then of his own dangers. And I am in no less care (saith Cicero) what the Common wealth will do when I am dead, then whiles I am yet alive. Luther in many places of his books tels us, he was much afraid that the true doctrine of justification by faith alone would be, after his death, much defaced if not utterly lost out of the Church. And it fell out accordingly in part, by the pestilent opinions and endeavours of Flacius, Osiander and other busy brochers of errours about that fundamental point. Whiles Luther lived, they forbore to vent themselves. But when his head was laid, Osiander was heard to boast Leonem mortuum esse; vulpes à se flocci pendi, that the Lion was dead: and for the foxes (meaning Melancthon and the rest) he cared not for them. Mihi enim mi[nus] ri curæ ch[ristus] &c. Cicer. Læl. Io. Fox Christ's triumph. p. nunc. Melch. Adam. in vit. Osiand.

Verse 16. Cunningly devised fables] Artificially composed and compiled, not without a shew of wisdome and truth, to deceive silly people; the Jesuites confess that the Legend of miracles of their Saints is for most part false; but it was made, say they, for good intention, that the common-people (the females especially) might be drawn with greater zeal to serve God and his Saints. And what shall we think of their Dominicks holy hypocrisy which he commended to his novices; and for the which he is so highly commended by Vincentius Episcopus Belvacensis in his life? σεσοφισμένοις.

Verse 17. This is my beloved Son] See the Notes on Mat. 3. 17. & 17. 5.

Verse 18. When we were with him] Witnesses of his glory, and the same were shortly after witnesses of his agony. Envy not the gifts or honours of others; such they have them upon no others terms, then to undergo the sorer trials.

In the holy mount] Holy for the while, as are our Churches, during the publike assemblies. viz. with a relative, not an inherent holiness.

Verse 19. A more sure word] The Authority of the Scriptures is greater then of an angels voice, of equal command to Gods audible and immediate voice, and of greater perspicuity and certainty to us; for besides inspiration, it is both written and sealed.

As unto a light] As the Governour of a ship hath his hand on the stern, his eye on the pole-star; so should we on Christ the day-star, Rev. 2. 28. and 22. 12.

Untill the day dawn] Till there be a more full Gospel-light.

And the day-star] Christ the star of Jacob, the bright morning-star, Rev. 3. the Sun of righteousness, Mal. 4.

Verse 20. Of any private interpretation] That is, of humane interpretation: Private is not here opposed to publike, but to divine, or to the holy Ghost. The old Prophet may bring a man into the Lions mouth, by telling him of an Angel that spake to him. How many have we in these daies, that dream their Midianitish dreams, and then tell it for Gospel to their neighbours?

Verse 21. As they were moved] Forcibly moved, acted, carried out of themselves to say and do what God would have them. φερόμενοι.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. Who privily shall bring in]

OR, fraudulently foist in false doctrines under the title of truth, and pretext of piety. Some truths they shall teach, the better to perswade to their falshoods. Together with the gold, silver and ivory of orthodox tenets, they have store of apes and peacocks, as Solomons ships had. Sunt mala mista bonis, sunt bona mista malis. παρεισάξουσιν.

Denying the Lord that brought them] Or, Freed them, viz. from their former idolatries and enormities, ut verbum ἀγοράζειν frequentius significat, saith one. Or, that bought them, as they conceited, and others charitably imagined; but it proved otherwise, as appeared by their Apostasie. Christ is said to buy reprobates, in the same sense wherein it is said that the Gods of Damascus smot or plagued Ahaz. 2 Chron. 28. 23. that is in his his opinion they did so: for an idol is nothing in the world, and can do neither good nor evil, Jer. 10. 5. 1 Cor. 8. 4.

Or, that bought them] viz. in laying down a sufficient price for all sinners, in taking upon him the common nature of all men, and in preaching to them in the Gospel that he dyed for sinners indefinitely, offering salvation, and beseeching them to receive it.

Verse 2. The way of truth shall be, &c.] The ancient Christians were generally hated and hooted at by the Heathens for the hereticks sake, who were also a kind of Christians, as Austin complaineth. And Epiphanius addeth that many Pagans refused to come near the Christians to joyn with them in any good exercise, Improbis sceleſtorum illorum factis conſternati, as being offended at the unclean conversation of divers hereticks, the Priscillianists especially, whose doctrine was,

Aug. de civ. Dei.

Verse 3. With feigned words] Covetousness is never without a cloke and flattering words (1 Thess. 2. 5.) for a colour; as, what wool is so course, but will take some or other colour? Seducers pretend the glory of God, and good of souls to their worldly and wicked practices, Phil. 3. 18. 19. And hereunto they want not fine sett words, forms of speech, whereby they first carry captive silly souls, and then make prize or merchandise of them; driving a trade with hell, and being factours for the devil, who will thank them well one day for their diligence; like as in the days of Hildebrand letters of thank, were said to be sent from hell to the Popish Clergy for those great numbers of souls, every day sent thither by their means.

Mat. Paris. hist. A.D. 1072

Verse 4. If God spared not the Angels] Though but for one sin only, and that in thought only. It sprang from the admiration of their own gifts, it was confirmed by pride and ambition, it was perfected by envy, stirred by the decree of exalting mans nature above Angels in and by Christ. Some say it was a transgression of some Commandment, in particular, (not expressed) as Adam was.

Verse 5. Bringing in the flood] And so burying them all in one universal grave of waters. In this universal deluge God swept away all: as if he had blotted that out of his title, Exod. 34. 6. and now took up that Emperours Motto, Fiat justitia & pereat mundus. Let justice be done, though the whole world be undone.

Verse 6. And turning the Cities] Burying them likewise in the dead sea, after that he had rained down hell from heaven upon them. See my notes upon Gen. 19. 24, 25.

Making them an ensample] Hanging them up in gibbets, as it were, that others might hear and fear.

Verse 7. Vexed] Gr. Labouring under it, as under an heavy burden, and as much tortured, as if he had been set upon a rack, as it is verse 8.

κατατρύμενος

Verse 8. In seeing and hearing] Every sinful Sodomite was a Hazael to his eyes, a Hadadrimmon to his heart.

Vexed his righteous soul] Guilt or grief is all that the good soul gets by conversing with the wicked.

Verse 9. The Lord knoweth how] He hath waies of his own, and commonly goeth a way by himself, such as we think not of; helping them that are forsaken of their hopes: Peter (if any man) might well say, The Lord knoweth how to deliver his; for he had been strangely delivered, Acts 12.

Verse 10. But chiefly] See the Note on Heb. 13. 4.

That walk after the flesh] That is, The harlot; as filthy dogs follow after a salt-bitch: so the harlot is called, Deut. 23. 18. The Helvetians had an old custome in their towns and villages, that when they received any new Priest into their Churches, they used to premonish him before, to take his Concubine, lest he should attempt any misuse of their wives and daughters.

Acts and Mon. fol. 751.

To speak evil of dignities] Here we have a lively picture of the Popish Clergy. Aretine, by a longer custome of libellous and contumelious speaking against Princes, had got such an habit, that at last he came to diminish and disesteem God himself. How boldly and basely doth Baronius bellow against the King of Spain his Soveraign? And he defends himself against another Cardinal reprehending his fierceness, thus, An imperious (impetuous he should have said) zeal hath no power to spare God himself.

Verse 11. Which are greater in power] viz. Then the mightiest Monarch, Dan. 10. 20 and are therefore called principalities and powers, 1 Pet. 3. 22. Mighty ones, Isa. 10. 34.

Verſe 12. As natural bruit beaſts] Some men put off all manhood, fall beneath the ſtirrop of reaſon, and are beaſtialized, yea ſatanized. Such an one was that man mentioned by Luther, who was ſo poſſeſſed with an unclean ſpirit, a vehement impetus, a ſpirit of whoredom (as the Prophet calleth it) that he was not aſhamed to ſpue out of his foulſt mouth theſe filthieſt words, If I might be ſure that this life would always laſt with me, I would wiſh no other heaven, but to be carried from one brothel-houſe to another, from one harlot to another, &c. Va dementiæ, & impietati. Horndorf. Theatr.

Speak evil of the things] Dare to reprehend what they do not comprehend, diſpraiſe ſound doctrine. Yea the holy Scriptures, blaſpheming them and their Prieſts, as Sanctius doth the Prophet Ezekiel; calling the deſcription of the Temple made by him, chap. 48. 41. 42. 43. &c. inſulſam deſcriptionem, a ſenſeleſs deſcription. See his Argument upon chap. 40.

Verſe 13. To riot in the day-time] See the Note on 1 Theſſ. 5. 7. The word herre endered riot, comes of a root that ſignifies to break; for there is nothing that doth ſo break and emaſculate the mindes of men as rioting and revelling. Luxury draws out a mans ſpirits, and diſſolves him. Hence Venus is called λυσιμελὴς by the Antients; and harlots are called Cruces Croſſes, by the young man in Terence. Salomons prodigal found them no better, Prov. 5. 11. after he had paid for his learning. τρυφὴ ἀ βρύπτω, frango.

Spots they are] Blots of goodneſs, botches of Chriſtian ſociety. Such are the Jeſuits, who tell us they can dally with the faireſt women, and yet not luſt after them. Such was that profligate Prieſt, who perſwaded many maids and matrons to lye with him under a pretence of religion; aſſerens impietatis & hypocriſeos plenam eſſe fiduciam, quæ caſtitate & pudicitiâ ſuâ potius quam Chriſti gratia niterentur, telling them that that faith of theirs was naught and counterfeit, whereby they were drawn to reſt more upon their chaſtity and modeſty, then upon Chriſt grace and merits, &c. I much doubt we have many ſuch Merchants, ſuch Mercidi Ribaldi, raſcal Ribaulds (as Math Paris cals them) now abroad amongſt us, in theſe laſt and looſeſt times. σπίλοι. Theatr. hiſtor. Horndorf. p. 569.

Verſe 14. Having eyes full of adultery] Gr. Of the adultereſs, as if ſhe were ſeen ſitting in the eyes of the adulterer. The wanton Greek was ſaid to have in his eyes ὐ κόρης ἄλλα πόρνας, Non virgines ſed meretrices, not maids but minions. Archilaus the Philoſopher told a young wanton, Nihil intereſt quibus membris cinædi ſitis, poſterioribus an prioribus. The leper was to ſhave his eye-brows, to teach us to take away the luſt of the eyes, Levit. 14. 9. And that cannot ceaſe to ſin] though they have made many Covvnants with God, promiſes to men. So Proverbs 19. 19. They break all, as eaſily as Samſon did the new ropes.

Exerciſed with covetous practices] Which they conſtantly follow, as the Artificer doth his trade.

This man (or monſter rather) was confident that the whole world would in time ſubmit to him, and be of his mind. And are not our Ranters (as they call themſelves) come up to him, and gone beyond him in their moſt prodigious opinions and practiſes?

Verſe 19. Promiſe them liberty] As Mahometiſm, and Popery, which is an alluring, tempting, bewitching religion. Sir Walter Raleigh knew what he ſaid, that were he to chuſe a religion for licentious liberty and laſciviouſneſs, he would chuſe the Popiſh religion. No ſin paſt, but the Pope can pardon: no ſin to come, but he can diſpenſe for it. No matter how long men have lived in any ſin (though it be the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt) extream unction at laſt will ſalve all.

Ver. 21. It had been better] Necuit ſanè Iudæ fuiſſe Apoſtolum, & Iuliano Chriſtianum: to begin well and not to proceed, is but to aſpire to an higher pitch, that the fall may be the more deſperate. Non quæruntur in Chriſtianis initia, ſed fines, ſaith Hierom. B. Bonner ſeemed at firſt to be a good man, and a favourer of Luthers doctrines. Acts and Mon. fol. 993. Harding was once a powerful preacher againſt Popery, afterwards a cruel perſecutor of the truth; D. Shaxton Biſhop of Salisbury ſaid to William Woolſey Martyr, and to others brought before him, Good brethren, remember your ſelves and become new men. For I my ſelf was in this fond opinion that you are now in; but I am now become a new man; Ah, ſaid Woolſey; are you become a new man? wo be to thee, thou wicked new man: for God ſhall juſtly judge thee for an Apoſtate, &c. Iſebius Agricola, that firſt Antinomian, condemned his error, publikely recanted it, and printed his revocation. D. Preſton of Gods attrib. p. 34.

And the earth ſtanding, &c.] God hath founded the earth upon the ſeas, and eſtabliſhed it upon the floods, Pſal. 24. 2. This Ariſtotle reckons among the wonders in nature, and well he may. God hath ſet the ſolid earth upon the liquid waters for our conveniency, Pſal. 104. 6, 7. This, if wicked Atheiſts would well weigh, it would make them tremble, Jer. 5. 22. But they have either ſo much to do, or ſo little to do, that they think not at all on theſe ſtanding miracles. Or if they do, yet for want of grace, all their thoughts of this nature ſoon vaniſh; they are but like prints made on the water; aſſoon as the finger is off, all is out. Lib. de mirab.

Verſe 6. Being overflowed with water] Therefore that is not altogether true, that all things continue as they were at firſt, as the ſcoffers affirmed, ver. 4.

Verſe 7. Reſerved unto fire] The old world was deſtroyed with water, Propter ardorem libidinis for the heat of their luſt, ſaith Ludolphus: the world that is now ſhall be deſtroyed with fire, Propter teporem charitatis, for their want of love. This latter age of the world is ſo filthy (ſaith Another) that it cannot be waſhed with water, and ſhall therefore be waſted with fire.

Verſe 8. One day is with the Lord, &c.] Nullum tempus occurrit regi; How much leſs to the Ancient of days? In God there is no motion or flux; therefore a thouſand years to him are but as one day.

Verſe 9. Not willing that any one ſhould periſh] See the Note on 1 Tim. 2. 4. Not willing that any of his ſhould periſh.

But that all ſhould come to repentance] Gr. Withdraw, go aſide, retire into ſome private place for the purpoſe of repentance. It is a great work and requires privacy. He that will make verſes or do any thing ſerious that requires ſtudy, will get alone, ſequeſter himſelf from company. He that would communewith his own heart, pour forth his ſoul, and make his peace with God, muſt get into a corner. He ſitteth alone, and keepeth ſilence, Lam. 3. 28. he ſummons the ſobriety of his ſenſes before his own judgement, and thinking ſeriouſly on his evil ways, he turneth his feet to Gods teſtimonies. χωρῆσαι. Pſal. 119. 59.

Verſe 10. The heavens ſhall paſs, &c.] The very viſible heavens are defiled with mens ſins, Revel 18. 5. and muſt therefore be purged by fire; as the veſſel that held the ſin offering was in the time of the law.

With a great noiſe] Such a noiſe as the ſea makes in a great ſtorm, or like the hiſſing of parchment riveled up with heat, as others make the compariſon. ῥοιζηδὸν.

Shall be burnt up] This the very Heathens knew in part, as appears by the writings of Lucretius, Cicero de natura Deorum, and Ovids Metam. lib. 1.

ποταπὸς. Verse 11. What manner of men] Even to admiration, Quales & quanti, as the word signifies, Mar. 13. 1. How accurate, and how elevate above the ordinary strain!

ἐν ἁγίαις ἀναστροφαῖς καὶ εὐσεβείαις. In all holy conversation and godliness] Gr. In holy conversations and godlinesses, in the plural; to shew that godliness should run through our whole conversation, as the warp runs through the woof.

Verse 12 Looking for] As Sisera's mother looked out at a window, and expecting the return of her son, said, Why are his chariots so long a coming? So should we look up and long for Christ coming in the clouds, those chariots that carried him up, and shall bring him back again.

And hasting unto] Votis accelerantes, speeding and accelerating. True it is that God that set the day wherein he will judge the world in righteousness, Acts 17. 31. and we cannot alter it: Yet we may be said to hasten it by our preparations, and prayers. O mera! Christe veni. Come Lord Jesus, come quickly.

The heavens being on fire, &c.] A far greater fire then that at Constantinople, where 7000 houses are said to have been on fire at once, an. Dom. 1633. Blunts voyage.

And the elements shall melt] And fall like scalding lead, or burning bell-mettal on the heads of the wicked, who shall give a terrible account with the world all on fire about their ears. Whether this shall fall out in the year 1657. (as some conjecture, because in the year of the world, 1657. the old world was drowned, and because the numeral letters in MVnDI ConfLagrat Io, make up the same number) I have nothing to affirm. Sure it is, the Saints shall take no hurt at all by this last fire, but a great deal of benefit. Methodius writeth that Pyragnus (a certain plant so called) grows green, and flourishes in the midst of the flames of burning Olympus, as much as if it grew by the banks of a pleasant river. And of this he saith, that himself was an eye-witness. Alsted. Chorn. Placarum sanè novissimi diei indicium & documentum.

Verse 13. According to his promise] Which is good sure-hold. For he pays not his promises with fair words, as Sertorius did, but with real performances.

Verse 14. That ye may be found of him] Watching, working, well-doing. See the Note on Mat. 24. 42, 44.

Verse 15. That the long-suffering, &c.] Rom. 2. 4. which sentence Peter picks out of Pauls epistles, as one of the choisest, and urgeth it here.

Even as our beloved brother, &c.] Ingenium est profiteri per quos profeceris, saith Pliny. S. Peter makes honourable mention of S. Paul; so Ezekiel of his contemporary Daniel.

Verse 16. Hard to be understood] See my True treasure. In things necessary the Scripture is plain and easie: and the very entrance thereinto giveth light, saith David, Psal. 119. 130. yea subtilty and sagacity saith Solomon, Prov. 1. 4. And for the more dark and difficult places, Legum obscuritates non assignemus culpæ scribentium, sed insciti non assequentium, saith he in Gellius, the fault is not to be laid upon the Scriptures, but upon our unskilfulness and inability to understand them.

Which they that are unlearned and unstable] That for want of sacred learning are unsetled, ill-bottomed; and do therefore, like Peter on the water, walk one step, and sink another. Our fore-fathers (saith Speed out of Walsingham) did not without great reason distinguish the people into learned and lewd: because such are commonly lewd, who are not learned &c. Sure we are out of this text, that they are unstable, that are unlearned; and that men therefore err, because they know not the Scriptures in the right sense of them; they erre in heart because they know not Gods ways, and become a prey to Seducers, because ever learning, but never come to the knowledge of the truth. The simple believeth every word, saith Solomon, Prov. 14. 1. The blind man swalloweth many a fly, saith our English proverb. The god of this world blinds the minds of his vassals, keeps them ignorant, and then doth what he will with them, as the Philistims did with Sampson, when they had digged out his eyes. He useth the same method ordinarily to carry on his designs, that he took in the Parlamentum indoctum the lack-learning Parliament held here Anno 1404. in the raign of Henry the fourth; Or as in the Council of Ariminum. The Arrians having procured the exile of the Orthodox learned Bishops, and perceiving the company that was left, though they were very unlearned, yet they would not be perswaded directly to disannul any thing that had been before concluded in the Council of Nice, did abuse their ignorance in proposing the matter, and drawing them to their side. For they demanded of them whether they would wor- Mat. 2. 2. Psal 45 2 Tim. 3. 7. Speed. 775.

Wreſt as they do, &c.] When we ſtrive to give unto the Scripture, and not to receive from it the ſenſe, when we factiouſly contend to faſten our conceits on God, like the harlot, take our dead and putrified fancies, and lay them in the boſome of the Scriptures, as of a mother, when we compel them to go two miles which of themſelves would go but one, when we put words into the mouths of theſe oracles by miſ-inferrences or miſ-applications, then are we guilty of this ſin of wreſting the Scriptures. Tertullian ſpeaketh of ſome that murther the Scriptures to ſerve their own purpoſes. And the ſame Author fitly calleth Marcion the heretick Murem Ponticum, the rat of Pontus; becauſe of his gnawing and tawing the Scripture to make it ſerviceable to his errours; this is a very dangerous ſin, when men ſhall writh the Scripture, and ſet it on the tenters to fit it to their fancies; as Scyron and Procruſtes are ſaid to have fitted their gueſts to the bed of braſs, which they had framed to their own bigneſs. Eadem Scripturarum faciunt.

Verſe 17. Beware leſt] Cavebis autem ſi pavebis. Let him that ſtands, take heed leſt he fall. Be not high-minded, but fear. Fear a ſnake under every flower, a ſnare under every new truth. Try the ſpirits whether they be of God, or not; becauſe many falſe Prophets are abroad, who deceive the hearts of the ſimple, and make them fall from their own ſtedfaſtneſs. Try therefore before ye truſt: looke before ye leap: Alioqui ſaliens antequàm videas, caſurus es antequàm debeas. i. e. If ye look not before ye leap, ye will fall before ye would. Therefore walk circumſpectly, tread gingerly, ſtep warily; lift not up one foot till ye have found ſure footing for the other, as thoſe, Pſal. 35. 6. Take the Apoſtles counſel here: never more need then now-adaies, quando facta eſt fides Evangeliorum fides temporum. Nam aut ſcribuntur fides ut volumus; aut, ut volumus intelliguntur, as Hilary complains of thoſe better times. It is grown a witty thing now amongſt ſuch variety of opinions, to hold the truth, and to be a ſound believer, as Eraſmus once ſaid. Beware therefore (every man for himſelf) leſt ye alſo ſwimming down the ſtream of the times, and led away with the errour of the wicked, fall from your own ſtedfaſtneſs. And (for a Soveraign preſervative) Grow in grace, and in the knowledge, &c. grow downward howſoever; grow in humility; and God will both teach and ſave the humble perſon. Bern. Hil. ad Conſtant. in lib. quem illi exhibuit.

Verſe 18. But grow] In firmneſs, in fineſs at leaſt; as an apple doth in mellowneſs; as Oaks grow more ſlowly then willows and bulruſhes, yet more ſolidly, and in the end to a greater bulk and bigneſs.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the first Epistle general of S. Iohn.

Chap. I.

Verse 1. That which was from the beginning] Christ, the eternal God. See the Note on Iohn 1. 2.

αὐτόπται. Which we have heard, &c.] The Man Christ Jesus, the Archpropher.

Which we have seen] And what so sure as sight? See Luke 1. 2. This was denied to many Kings and Prophets, Luke 10. 24. To have seen Christ in the flesh was one of the three things that Austin wished: which yet Saint Paul set no such high price upon, in comparison of a spiritual sight of him, 2 Cor. 5. 16. See the Note there.

ἐθεασάμεθα. Which we have looked upon] Diligently, and with delight: How sweet shall be the sight of him in heaven? With what unconceivable attention and admiration shall we contemplate his glorified body out-shining the brightest Cherub?

ψηλαφάω. And our hands have handled] i. e. With whom we have most familiarly conversed, sitting with him at the same table, and eating some bushels of salt with him, as the Greek word, Acts 1. 4. seems to import. Christs faithful Ministers that have the honour to handle his law (as the phrase is, Ier. 2. 8.) come nearest to the Apostles in this glorious priviledge.

Verse 2. For the life was manifested] Christ who is life essential, swallowed up death in victory: and brought life and immortality to light by the Gospel, 2 Tim. 1. 10.

Verse 3. Declare we unto you] That (Theophilus-like) ye may be at a certainty, fully perswaded, Luke 1. 1. having a plerophory or full assurance of understanding to the acknowledgement of the mystery of Christ, Col. 2. 2. See the Note there.

And truly our fellowship] If any should object: Is that such a preferment to have fellow-fellowship with you? What are you? &c. He answereth: As much as we are, we have fellowship with the Father and Son: Union being the ground of communion, all that is theirs is ours: This made Moses cry out, Happy art thou O Israel! or, Oh the happiness of thee O Israel! the heaped up happiness? Who is like unto thee? &c. The Saints how mean soever, are (in true account) the worlds Paragons, the only earthly Angels: because in fellowship with the Father and the Son, that is with the Father by the Son. Deut. 33. 29.

Verse 4. And these things write we] Out of the Scriptures, those wels of salvation, draw we waters with joy, Isa. 12. 4. suck these breasts of consolation, and be satisfied, Isa. 66. 11. Nusquam inveni requiem nisi in libro & claustro, saith one. Chrysostome brings in a man laden with inward troubles, coming into the Church; where, when he heard this passage read, Why art thou cast down my soul, &c. hope in God, &c. he presently recovered comfort. There is a singular efficacy in the promises, to comfort those that are cast down, Rom. 15. 4. See the Note there. Hom. in Genes.

Verse 5. That God is light] He is αὐτόφως, Light essential, and they that walk with him must be as so many chrystal glasses with a light in the midst; for can two walk together, and they not be agreed? Amos 3. 3. That was a devilish sarcasm of the Manichees, that God (till he had created Light) dwelt in darkness, as if God were not eternal light, and dwelt in light unapproachable, 1 Tim. 6. 16. But what mad men were the Carpocratian heretics, who taught (even in S. Iohns days, as Epiphanius testifieth) that men must sin, and do the will of the devil: otherwise they could not enter into heaven? These might well be some of those Antichrists he complaineth of chap. 4. and of those Libertines and lyars he here argueth against.

Verse 6. If we say that, &c.] As they do that profess to know God, but in works do deny him, Tit. 1. 16. See the Note there.

And walk in darkness] There is a child of light that walks in darkness, Isa. 50. 10. but that's in another sense. The wicked also, that are here said to walk in darkness, have their sparkles of light that they have kindled, Isa. 50. 11. but it is as a light smitten out of a flint, which neither warms, nor guides them, but dazelleth their eyes, and goes out, so that they lie down in sorrow.

Verse 7. We have fellowship one, &c.] That is, God and we; inasmuch as we are made partakers of the divine nature, and are pure as God is pure, 1 John 3. 3. in quality, though not in an equality. We have fellowship with God, 1. In his holiness. 2. In his happiness.

And the blood of Iesus] That whereas Gods pure eye can soon find many a foul flaw in the best of us (our righteousness being mixt, as light and darkness, dimness at least in a painted glass, died with some obscure and dim colour, it is transparent and giveth good, but not clear and pure light) lo here's a ready remedy, a sweet support, The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. And God beholding us in the face of his son, seeth nothing amiss in us; No more then David did in lame Mephibosheth, when he beheld in him the features of his friend Ionathan.

Verse 8. If we say that we have] If any should be so fancy or rather silly, as to say with Donatus, Non habeo domine quod ignoscas, I have no sin for Christ to cleanse me from, he is a loud lyar, and may very well have the whetstone. S. Iames for his innocent conversation was surnamed Justus: and yet, putting himself into the number, he saith, For in many things we offend all. James 3. 2.

Verse 9. If we confess] Homo agnoscit, Deus ignoscit. And Confessio peccati est vomitus sordium animæ. Iudah (his name signifies confession) got the kingdom from Reuben, No man was ever kept out of Gods kingdom for his confessed badness; Many are for their supposed goodness; as those Iustitiaries in the former verse, whose hearts are big-swoln with high conceits of themselves; and whose lips are held close by the devil; who knows well, there's no way to purge the sick soul but upwards. Aug.

He is faithful] And yet Bellarmine saith, That he cannot finde in all the book of God, any promise made to confession of sin to God. He might have seen (besides other places not a few, Prov. 28. 13. Psal. 32. 5. &c.) that this very text is a most heavenly promise of mercy to those that confess heartily, and not hollowly. The word faithful also referrs to Gods promises, as just doth to the blood of Christ (the ransom received) whereby the Saints are cleansed; and it stands not with Gods justice to demand the same debt twice, viz. of the surety and of the debtour. De Iustificat. l. 1. cap. 21.

From all unrighteousness] All without exception; why then should we put in conditions, and as it were enterline Gods Covenant? He is a sin-pardoning God, Neh. 9. 31. no god like him for that in heaven and earth, Mic. 7. 17. he multiplieth pardon, as we multiply sin, Isa 55. 7. he doth it freely, for his own sake. naturally Exod. 34. 6. constantly, Psalm 130. 4. and here. The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth (not, he hath cleansed or will cleanse, but he doth it) daily and duely, constantly and continually. This should be as a perpetual picture in our hearts.

Verse 10. We make him a liar] For the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, Rom. 11. 32. See the Note there.

Chap. II.

Verse 1. That ye sin not]

PResuming upon an easie and speedy pardon. The worser sort of Papists will say; when we have sinned, we must confess; and when we have confessed, we must sin again, that we may confess again; so making account of confessing, as drunkards do of vomiting. But we have not so learned Christ. If his Word dwell richly in us, it will teach us to deny ungodliness, &c. To forsake as well as confess sin; and not after confession, to turn again to folly, or, (as those that are dog-sick) to their former vomit; with Confession of sin must be joyned Confusion of sin, Prov. 28. 13. We may not do as those Philistims, that confessed their errour, and yet sent away the Ark of God. Nor
1 Sam. 6. as Saul, I have sinned, yet honour me before the people: Nor yet as those perverse Israelites, We have sinned, We will go up;
1 Sam. 15. though God had flatly forbidden them at that time to go up against the Amorites: and for their presumptuous attempt brought them back by weeping crosse, Deut. 1. 41, 42, 43. &c. Sin confessed must be 1. Disallowed in our judgements. 2. Disavowed and declined in our Wills and Affections. 3. Cast out of our practise; Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with Idols? Hos. 14. 8. He shall pollute the images, that he had once perfumed: he shall angrily say unto them, Get you hence, Isa. 30. 22.

And if any man sin] Being taken afore he is aware, Gal. 6. 1. See the Note there.

We have an advocate] Who appears for us in heaven, and pleads our cause effectually. See Heb. 9. 24.

Jesus Christ the righteous] Or else he could not go to the Father for us. See the Note on John 16. 10.

Verse 2. He is the propitiation] Heb. Copher: He coffers up, as it were, and covers our sins, Psal. 78, 38. See the note on Rom. 3. 25. The Hebrew word used for covering, כפר and propitiating of sin is (Genesis 6.) used of the pitch or plaister, whereby the wood of the Ark was so fastened, that no water could get in.

But also for the sins of the whole world] That is, of all the faithful, both of Jews and Gentiles; that mundus ex mundo, that world of whom the world is not worthy, Heb. 11.

Verse 3. We know that we know him] By a reflex act of the soul; hence the assurance of faith, the fruit of fruitfulness, 1 Cor. 15. 58.

That we know him] With a knowledge not apprehensive only, but affective too.

If we keep his commandments] Si faciamus precepta, etiamsi non perficiamus; If we think upon his commandments to do them, Psal. 103. 8. aim at them, as at a mark Psal. 119. 6.

(Non semper feriet quodcunque minabitur arcus)

With well to an exact obedience which yet we cannot attain to, Psal. 119. 4. 5. be doing at it as we can, following after righteousness, Prov. 15. 9. as a poor Prentice follows his trade, though he be nothing less then his craftsmaster; and lastly, be humbled for for our daily aberrations, reſolving and ſtriving to do better; this is that Evangelical keeping of Gods commandments, which God (meaſuring the deed by the deſire, and the deſire by the ſincerity thereof) will accept and crown, through Chriſt our propitiation.

Verſe 4. He that ſaith I know him] Here he diſputeth againſt Verbaliſts and Solifidians. See James 2. 14. with the Note there.

Is a lyar] i. e. An hypocrite; his ſpot is not the ſpot of Gods children, Deut 32.5. for they are children that will not lye, Iſa. 63.8. They all deſerve that title of honour that was given of old to Arrianus the hiſtorian, viz. φιλαληθὴς, A lover of truth. They know that the God whom they ſerve, deſireth truth in the inward parts, Pſal. 51. 6 and that Dicta factis deficientibus erubeſcant (as Tertullian hath it) Words without deeds will not bear a man out in the end. 'Tis a queſtion whether the deſire of being, or diſlike of ſeeming ſincere, be greater in the good heart. Not ſo every looſe and ungirt Chriſtian, every profligate profeſſour, that denieth that in deed, that he affirmeth in word.

Verſe 5. In him verily is the love of God perfected] S. John was a meer compound of ſweeteſt love. As iron put into the fire, ſeemeth to be nothing but fire: ſo he (the beloved diſciple) was turned into a lump of love. Hence he ſo preſſeth love perfect love to God and his people. And Hierome tels us, that living to a very great age at Epheſus, he would get up into the pulpit; and when through weakneſs of body he could ſay no more, he would ſay, Little children love one another; ſi hoc ſolum fiat, ſufficit, If this be well done, all's done. Hierom. in cap. 6. ad Gal.

That we are in him] In communion with him, and in conformity to him.

Verſe 6. To walk even as he walked] This is the ſame with that Col. 2. 6. to walk in Chriſt; and with that, 1 Pet. 2. 21. to follow his ſteps. See the Note there.

Verſe 7 I write no new commandment] The Apoſtle ſtudiouſly declineth the ſuſpition of novelty. We ſhould ever ſet a jealous eye upon that which is new, and ſtand in the old way. Jer. 6. 16. in the ancient paths; Ier. 18. 15. Gods people are called the ancient people, Iſa. 44. 7. And Idolaters are ſaid to ſacrifice to new gods, that came newly up, Deut. 32. 17. Truth, as wine, is better with age, Luke 5. 39 And of witneſſes Ariſtotle well ſaith, the older they are, the more credible, becauſe leſs corrupted. As we preferr the neweſt Philoſophy, ſo the ancienteſt Divinity; and we may juſtly ſuſpect them of falſhood and deluſions, who arrogate to themſelves to utter oracles, to bring to light new truths, &c. πάντων οἱ παλαιοὶ, ἀληθέστεροι. Rhet. l. 1.

Verſe 8. A new commandment] See the Note on John 13. 34. A new commandment it is called, ſaith a late learned Interpreter, 1. Becauſe it was renewed by the Lord after it had been as it were antiquated, and almoſt extinguiſhed. 2. Becauſe it was commanded to ſuch men as were new or renewed. 3. Becauſe it was an excellent commandment.

Verſe 9. And hateth his brother] As Paul preſſeth faith, and Peter hope, ſo John love, thoſe three cardinal vertues, 1 Cor. 13. 13. See the Note on verſ. 5.

Is in darkneſs] Yea in the Prince of darkneſs, who acteth and agitateth him, as he did Cain. Holy Greenham oft prayd, that he might keep up his young zeal with his old diſcretion.

Verſe 10. None occaſion, &c.] Gr. No ſcandal; i.e. no occaſion of ſpiritual falling; whereby a man is made any manner of way worſe, and backwarder in goodneſs. Quod fieri poteſt vel dicto, vel facto, ſive exemplo in moribus, ſaith learned Lyſerus, which may be done by word, deed or evil example. σκάνδαλον.

Verſe. 11 He that hateth, &c] There is a paſſion of hatred (ſaith a famous Divine) This is a kinde of averſeneſs, and riſing of the heart againſt a man, when one ſees him, ſo that he cannot away with him, nor ſpeak to, nor look courteouſly or peaceably upon him, &c. 2. A habit of hatred, when the heart is ſo ſettled in this alienation and eſtrangement, that it grows to wiſh and ſeek his hurt. This is man-ſlaughter, 1 John 3, 5.

Verſe 12 I write unto you little children] A Chriſtian hath his degrees of growth; childehood, 1 Cor. 3. 1, 2. Youth or well-grown age, when he is paſt the ſpoon, as here: old age, Acts 21. 16.

Becauſe your ſins are forgiven you] though perhaps you as yet know it not, through weakneſs of faith and ſtrength of corruption.

Verse 13. Him that is from the beginning] The Ancient of days. Old men love to speak of ancient things. These are ancient things, 1 Chron. 4. 22. You know him; with a knowledge of acquaintance; you have had much familiarity and intercourse with him; you are not far from knowing even as also your are known. 1 Cor. 13. 12. To this pitch of perfection all Gods people must aspire, as all men do follow after old age.

Because ye have overcome the wicked one] The glory of young men is their strength, Prov. 20. 29. The Hebrew word there rendered young men, signifieth choice men, &c. for military imployments: neither can they better shew their valour then by resisting the devil, that he may fly from them. Weak grace may evidence pardon of sin: but tis strong grace that can overcome the temptations of Satan.

Because ye have know the Father] We say, He is a wise child that knows his father (and the Greeks have a Proverb to the same purpose) but God hath no childe so young that more or less knoweth him not. The bastardly brood of Rome are all for their mother. Hom. Od. l. 1.

Verse 14. Because ye have known him] The same again, as vers. 13. which to a carnal heart may seem superfluous. Et certè si humano ingenio conscripti essent libri illi, quos pro sacris (ita ut verissimè sunt) agnoscimus & veneramur, bonum alicubi dormitasse Homerum diceremus, said one. But far be it from us to reprehend what we cannot comprehend.

Verse 15. Love not the world] You fathers, and you young and strong men, let me caution you (before I speak again to the little children vers. 18.) to beware of worldlinesse. A man may be very mortified, and yet very apt to dote on the world.

If any man love the world] Have it he may, and use it too, as the traveller useth his staff (which either he keeps or casts away, as it furthers or hinders his journey) but love it he must not, unless he will renounce the love of God. See the Note on Mat. 6. 24. Col. 3. 2. Aristotle in his Politicks teacheth, by the example of Thales, that Philosophers may be rich: but he excellently addeth ἀλλ᾽ οὐ τοῦτο δεῖ σπουδάζειν, howbeit this is not their chief study; it is but a by-businesse with them. Polit. lib. 1. cap. ult.

The love of the father is not in him] The Sun-beams extinguish the fire: so doth the love of the world the love of God. But some not so much as roving at God, make the world their standing mark.

Verse 16. The lust of the flesh, the lust of, &c.] That is, pleasure, profit, preferment: the Worldlings Trinity, as one saith. Compare herewith Christs three-fold temptation, and S. Iames his character of worldly wisdom, Iames 3. 15. with the Note there. It is his pleasure, his profit, and his honour (saith a Divine) that is the Natural mans Trinity, and his carnal self that is these in Unity. And to the same purpose the Christian Poet, Luke 1.

Ambitiosus honos, & opes, & fœda voluptas,
Hæc tria pro trino numine Mundus habet.

But is of the world] Base and beotlesse. Nec verum, nec vestrum. To know the vanity of the world (as of a mist) you must go a little from it.

Verse 17. And the world passeth away] As the stream of a swift river passeth by the side of a City. Animantis cujusque vita in fuga est. Life it self wears out in the wearing, as a garment; all things below are mutable and momentary. Wilt thou set thy heart upon that is not? saith Solomon.

And the lust thereof] So that although thou wert sure to hold these things of the world, yet they may be suddenly lost to thee, because thou canst not make thine heart delight in the same things still. Not the world only, but the lust thereof passeth away; there is a curse of unsatisfiableness lies upon the creature. Ἅπαντων ἡ πλησμονή, saith the Orator; There is a satiety of all things. The worlds comforts are sweeter in the ambition then in the fruition; for after a little while we loath, what we lusted after, as Amnon did Tamar. Men first itch, and then scratch, and then smart. Dolor est etiam ipsa voluptas, Cruciger used oft to say, Omnia peterent, prater amare Deum.

Verse 18. Little children] Children may be easily cozened, and made to take a sheep-counter for an angel, because broader and brighter; so young Christians are soon seduced.

seduced: hence they are here cautioned. See the Note on chap. 1. v 5.

Verse 19. But they were not of us] No more were our Antitrinitarians, Arrians, Antiscripturists, ever of our Church, otherwise then as wens and botches, whatever our adversaries averr and cavil. So of old, because the Waldenses and Manichees lived in the same places, and were both held hereticks, the Papists maliciously gave out that the Waldenses (those ancient Protestants) were defiled with the errours of the Manichees and Catharists, which yet they ever abhorred.

Verse 20. But ye have an Unction] That oil of gladness, the holy Ghost. In derision hereof, Domitian the tyrant cast S. John into a caldron of boling oil, but he by a miracle came forth unhurt.

Ye know all things] Not all things knowable, but all things needful to be known.

Verse 21. Because ye know not, &c.] Because ye are utterly ignorant: for God hath no blinde children, but they all know him from the least to the greatest. Howbeit, the Angels know not so much, but they would know more, Ephesians 3. 10. Should not we?

Verse 22. That denieth that Jesus] Papists deny him as a King, in setting up the Pope; as a Priest, in setting up the Mass; as a Prophet, in piecing their humane traditions to the holy Scriptures.

Verse 23. The same hath not the Father] See the Note on Ioh. 5. 23. Mahomet speaks very honourably of Christ, but denies his Divinity, and that he was crucified. He acknowledgeth that he was the word and power of God, and that all that believe in him shall be saved, &c.

Vers 24. Let that therefore abide] Persevere and hold fast the faith of the Gospel without wavering in it, Ephes. 4. 14. or starting from it, 2 Pet. 2. 20. Be as the center, or as mount Sion, stedfast and unmoveable. Stand fast; for ye are sure to be shaken: the tree must be shaken, that rotten fruit may fall off.

Verse 25. Even eternal life] Hold therefore the doctrine of faith sound and entire by the hand of faith, that ye may receive the end of your faith, the salvation of your souls.

Verse 26. That seduce you] That carry you into by-ways, high-ways to hell.

Verse 27. But the anointing] See ver. 20. It was an aggravation of the fall of Saul, 2 Sam. 1. 21. as though he had not been anointed; so for the Saints to fall from their own stedfastness.

Verse 28. Little children, abide in him] q. d. Your enemies are many and crafty; therefore keep home, keep home; this shall be no grief unto you, nor offence of heart, as she said, 1 Sam. 25. 31.

Verse 29. Is born of him] And exactly resembles him, as a childe doth his father. See 1 Pet. 1. 17. and the Note on Mat. 5. 9.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1. Behold what manner]

Qualem & quantum, as 2 Pet. 3. 11. See the Note on John 1. 12. If Jacob was at such pains and patience to become son in law to Laban; if David held it great a matter to be son in law to the King; What is it then to be sons and daughters to the Lord Almighty? 2 Cor. 6. 18.

The world knoweth us not] Princes unknown are unrespected; Unkent, unkist, as the Northern Proverb hath it. After the sentence was pronounced upon M. Bainham the Martyr, he was counselld by M. Nicolas Wilson to conform himself to the Church; To whom he answered, I trust I am the very childe of God, which ye blinde asses (said he) do not perceive. The Kings daughter is all glorious within, her beauty is inward; she is black but comely as the tents of Kedar; rough, but rich, as the Tabernacle in the wilderness, covered with goats hair, but within costly and curious; as Brutus his staff in the story, cujus intus solidum aurum corneo velabatur cortice. All righteous men are Kings, as may appear by comparing Mat. 13. 17. with Luke 10. 24. they are kings in righteousness ousnes as Melchisedech, but somewhat obscure ones as he: they must be content to pass to heaven as Christ their head did, as concealed men. Their glorious faith, James 2. 1. now not noticed, or regarded, shall one day be found to praise, honour, and glory, 1 Pet. 1. 7.

Verse 2. What we shall be] Great things we have in hand, but greater in hope: much in possession, but more in reversion. Let this comfort us against the contempts cast upon us by the world, blind and besides itself in point of salvation.

1 Cor. 13. 11 For we shall see him as he is] Now we see as in a glass obscurely, as an old man through spectacles, as a weak eye looks upon the Sun; but in heaven we shall see him as he is, so far as a creature is capable of that blissfull vision.

Verse 3. Purifieth himself] That's true hope that runs out into holiness. Faith and Hope purge, and work a suitableness in the soul to the things believed and hoped for.

Even as he is pure] In quality, though not in an equality. There shall be comparatio, though not equiparatio.

Verse 4. Sin is the transgression] As there is the same roundness in a little ball as in Concil. Trident. a bigger, so the same disobedience in a small sin as in a great. Papists tell us that concupiscence is not truly and properly a sin; but St. Paul saith otherwise, Rom. 7. There are amongst us, that say, That original sin is not forbidden by the Law; but sure we are it is cursed and condemned by the Law, as that which hath in it a tacite consent to all sin.
Contra Faust. l. 22. c. 27. Peccatum est dictum, factum, concupitum contra aternam legem, saith Austin. Any want of conformity to the eternal law is sin.

Verse 5. To take away our sins] Shall sin live that killed Christ? Shall I drink the blood of these men? said David of those that but ventured their lives for him. Oh that each Christian would turn Jew to himself, and kill the red cow, &c. Present himself a whole burnt sacrifice to God: not going about to frustrate the end of Christs incarnation and passion, by retaining that sin that he came to take away, lest that doleful
Joh. 7. sentence be passed upon him, that was once upon the stubborn Jews, Ye shall die in your sins.

Verse 6. Sinneth not] Sin may rebel, it cannot raign in a Saint. He sinneth not sinningly; there is no way of wickedness in him, Psal. 139. he loves not sin, he lies not in it, but riseth again by repentance, and is restless till that be done, and done to purpose.

Verse 7. Let no man deceive you] As if you might pass è cœno in cœlum, flie to heaven with dragons wings, dance with the devil all day, and sup with Christ at night; live all your lives long in Dalilah's lap, and then go to Abrahams bosome when you die. These are the devils dirt-dawbers, that teach such doctrine, his upholsters that sow such pillows, Ezek. 13. 18.

He that doth righteousness, is righteous] Provided that he do it from a right principle. For otherwise men may naturally perform the outward act of righteousness, and yet not be righteous persons; as Ahab humbled himself. Alexander the Great, when he had killed Clitus, was troubled in conscience, and sent to all kinds of Philosophers (as it were to so many Ministers) to know what he might do to appease his conscience, and satisfie for that sin. Uriah that brought in the altar of Damascus is called a faithful witness, Isa. 8. 2. true of his word; yet no man looketh upon him as righteous. It is not (saith a Reverend man) in Divinity as in moral Philosophy, where justa & juste agendo fimus justi, by doing righteous things and righteously we are made righteous; But we have the Esse first, and then the Operari, &c. the habit, and then the act.

ποιῶν. Verse 8. He that committeth sin] That makes a trade of it, and can act it (as the word properly signifieth) not act it only.

Is of the devil] Bears his image, wears his livery; is as like him as if spet out of his mouth.

For the devil sinneth] Or is a sinning: he never ceaseth to sin, he commits the sin against the holy Ghost every moment.

That he might destroy the works] The devil then hath his works in the very hearts of the elect, for whose cause Christ came into the world: That he might unravel the devils works against mankind: trampled upon him and triumphed over him on the cross, and will tread him under our feet also shortly. But what a bald conceit is that of Josephus, that God when he said He shall bruise thy head, meant no more but this, Every Son of Eve whensoever he meeteth with a Serpent, shall strike it upon the head: which containeth in it somewhat hurtful to mankind? Antiq. Iudaic. l. 1. c. 2.
Ipsa conteret tibi caput. devils work, break his head, Gen. 3. 15. The Son of the woman, our Saviour (not the virgin Mary, as Papists blasphemously affirm) breaks the Serpents head, that first of the devils

Verse 9. For his seed] The new nature, which causeth that sin cannot carry it away without some counter-buffs. The spirit quickens the word: as there is a spirit in the natural seed that maketh it prolifical: so here:

He cannot sin] i. e. Sinningly, so as to be transformed into sins image: cannot do wickedly with both hands earnestly, Mic. 7. He sinneth not totally and finally, he cannot so fall as Apostates: for the seed of God ever abideth in him. Bellarmine is forced to confess that this is the hardest place in all the bible, urged for proof of perseverance in grace.

Verse 10. In this the children of God] As Davids daughters were known by their garments of divers colours, 2 Sam. 13. 18. So are Gods children by their piety and charity.

Verse 11. That we should love, &c.] This beloved disciple was all for love. See the Note on Chap. 2. 9. and on Chap. 2. 5.

Verse 12. Who was of that wicked one] Tertullian calleth Cain the devils Patriarch. Cain is dead, saith another, but I could wish that he did not still live in his heirs and executours, Qui clavam ejus sanguine Abelis rubentem, ut rem sacram circumferunt, adorant & venerantur, who bear about and make use of Cains club, to knock on the head Gods righteous Abels. Bucbol.

And slew his brother] Gr. Cut his throat. Acerbissima sunt odia (ut ita nominem) Theologica, saith one. These Divinity hatreds are most deadly. Such fratricides were Alphonsus Diazius, and Charles King of France, stirred up by Pope Urban to kill his brother Manford King of Sicily. σφαξὸς.

Because his own works &c.] The old enmity, Gen 3. 15. So Numb. 22. 3, 4. Moab was irked, because of Israel, or did fret and vex at them, as Exod. 1. 12. yet they were allied, and passed by them in peace, and, by the slaughter of the Amorites, freed them from evil neighbours; which had taken away part of their Land, and might do more, as one hath well observed.

Verse 13. Marvel not my brethren] Sith it was so from the beginning, and the very first man that died, died for religion; so early came martyrdome into the world.

Verse 14. We know that we have passed] Not we think, we hope, &c. If we would not have with the Merchant an estate hanging upon ropes, and depending upon uncertain windes, let us make sure work for our souls. This is a jewel that the Cock on the dunghil meddles not with. Sensum electionis ad gloriam in hac vita nullum agnosco, saith Grevinchovius the Arminian, I know no such thing as assurance of heaven in this life. Papists allow us nothing beyond a conjectural confidence, unless by special revelation. Miserable comforters! They tell us that to taste though but with the tip of a rod (Jonathan-like) of this honey will hinder us in the chase of our lusts; But believe them not; for the joy of the Lord is our strength, Neh. 8. 10. — fortunam rudentibus aptam.

Because we love the brethren] This is to bee seen in the Natives of New-England. The first appearance of grace in them is, their love and respect to those that are truly gratious.

Verse 15. Whosoever hateth his brother] Not to love then is to hate, as not to save a man is to kill him, Marke 3. 4.

Is a murtherer] Because he wisheth him out of the world, as Caracalla did his brother Geta, of whom he said, Divus sit, modo non sit vivus, I would he were in heaven or anywhere, so that I were rid of him. By like reason we may say that sin is God-murther; forasmuch as sinners are God-haters, Rom. 1. 30. and could wish there were no God, that they might never come to judgement. The godly man on the contrary cries out with David, Vivat Deus, Let the Lord live, and blessed be the God of my salvation, &c. Psal. 18. 46.

Verse 16. Because he laid down] See the Note on Ioh. 15. 13. Rom. 5. 8.

We ought also to lay down our lives] If Pylades can offer to die for Orestes meerly for for a name, or out of carnal affection at the best: Should not Christians lay down their own necks one for another, as Aquila and Priscilla did for Paul? Rom. 16. 4.

τὸν βίον. Verse 17. This worlds good] Gr. Livelyhood, which is all that the world looks after.

κλείσῃ. And shutteth up his bowels, &c.] Not drawing out unto him both his sheaf and his soul, Isa 58. 9. But locking up as with a key (so the Greek here signifies) both his hand and his bowels; not considering his brothers necessity and his own ability.

Verse 18. Let us not love in word] Words are light-cheap: and there is a great deal of mouth-mercy abroad. Julian the Apostate is not presently a friend to Basil, though he write unto him, φίλος φίλῳ, καὶ ἀδελφὸς ἀδελφῷ, Thou art my friend and beloved brother. The Roman legions loved Otho the Emperour, saith the Historian, and gave him all respect, οὐκ ἀπὸ τῆς γλώττης, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐγκάτων ψυχῆς, not from the teeth outward, but from the heart-root. See the Notes on Jam. 2. 14, 15, 16. Dio.

Verse 19. And shall assure our hearts] This, saith father Latimer, is the sweet-meats of the feast of a good conscience. There are other dainty dishes in this feast, but this is the banquet.

Conscia mens ut cuique sua est, ita concipit intra Pectora pro facto spemque metumque suo. Ovid. Verse 20, If our heart condemn us] Conscience is Gods spie, and mans over-seer, Domesticus index, judex, carnifex; Gods deputy-judge, holding court in the whole soul, bearing witness of all a mans doings and desires, and accordingly excusing or accusing, absolving or condemning, comforting or tormenting. Quid tibi prodest non habere conscium, habenti conscientiam? saith One; And Another, Turpe quid ausurus, te sine teste cave. Imprimis reverere teipsum. Look to conscience.

Verse 21. Then have we confidence] Sincerity is the mother of serenity, Sine qua, tranquillitas omnis tempestas est, saith Isidore. Uprightness hath boldness. It is not a peace, but a truce, that the wicked have; such a storm will befall them as shall never be blown over. Israel is the heir of peace, Gal. 6. 16. Isa. 32. 17.

Verse 22. And whatsoever we ask] sc. According to his will. Fiat voluntas mea, quia tua said Luther. I can have what I will of God, said one; for my will shall be concentrick with his will.

Because we keep] The obedience of faith emboldens us: yet may no man say as the Prodigal, Give me the portion that belongeth to me. It was a proud speech of that Emperour, that said, *Non sic Deum colimus, aut sic vivimus, ut ille nos vincere*t, We have not so served God, that the enimy should overcome us. It was much worse in that arrogant Papist that said, God forbid that we should enjoy heaven as of alms to us: no, we have it by purchase or conquest. Antonin. Philo.

Verse 23. And this is his commandment] This is the sum and substance of the Gospel, that we believe and love: and the more we believe Gods love to us, the more love shall we bear one to another; for our love is but a reflex of his.

And love one another, as he gave us commandment] Lo, love is a commandment; We should therefore not only submit, but embrace it joyfully as a gift.

Verse 24. By the spirit] Christ hath satisfied the wrath of the Father: and now the Father and Christ both, as reconciled, send the Spirit, as the fruit of both their loves, to inhabit our hearts. And truly, next unto the love of Christ indwelling in our nature, we may well wonder at the love of the holy Ghost, that will dwell in our defiled souls.

Chap. IV.

Verse 1. But try the spirits]

AS Lapidaries do their stones, as Goldsmiths do their metals: A Bristow stone may look as well as an Indian diamond; and many things glister besides gold. Try therefore before you trust that which is doctrinally delivered unto you; being neither over credulous; the fool believeth every thing; nor rashly censorious, as those were that said of our Saviour, This man blasphemeth. See the Note on 1 Thess 5. 21.

Because many false Prophets] Both the old Church, Deut. 13. 1. and the new, Acts 20. 30. were ever pestered with them.

Verſe 2. Hereby know ye the ſpirit] Bring it to this teſt. Gold may be rub'd or melted, it remains orient; ſo doth truth. Whereas error as glaſs (bright, but brittle) cannot endure the hammer of fire.

That confeſſeth] That preacheth Chriſt crucified.

Verſe 3. Is not of God] And yet he is not called an Atheiſt, or an Antitheiſt, but Antichriſt, that is, an oppoſite to Chriſt; as if his oppoſing ſhould not be ſo much to Chriſts nature, or perſon, as to his unction and function.

Verſe 4. And have overcome] viz. In your head Chriſt, and by the help of his holy Spirit, your ſweet inhabitant, whereby ye are more then Conquerors; becauſe ſure to overcome and triumph.

Verſe 5. They are of the world] i.e. The ſeducers; fit lettice for ſuch lips; Dignum patellâ operculum. Vos infernates eſtis, Ye are from beneath, I am from above, ſaith Chriſt, *Joh.*8.23.

Therefore ſpeak they of the world] The water riſeth not (unleſs forced) above the fountain. Out of the ware-houſe, the ſhop is furniſhed. Carnal teachers gratifie their hearers with pleaſing poſitions. The Papiſts in their Petition to K. James for a Toleration, plead this as an argument, That their Religion is agreeable to mens nature; and indeed it is an alluring, tempting, bewitching Religion, giving way to all licentiouſneſs and laſciviouſneſs. So Mahomet in his Alcoran tels his followers concerning Venery, That God did not give men ſuch appetites to have them fruſtrate, but enjoyed, as made for the guſt of man, not for his torment; and a great deal more of ſuch paltry ſtuff.

Verſe 6. Heareth us] Chriſts ſheep are rational; they can diſcern his voice from that of a ſtranger, and will hear it not with that griſtle only that grows upon their heads, but with the ear of their ſoul, which trieth doctrines as the mouth doth meat, Job 34.3. and knoweth the ſpirit of truth, and the ſpirit of error.

Verſe 7. Beloved, let us love one another] This beloved Diſciple breaths nothing but love; as if he had been born with love in his mouth, as they ſay.

Verſe 8. Knoweth not God] If moral vertue could be ſeen with mortal eyes, ſaith Plato, it would draw all hearts unto it. If God were well known, he could not but be beſt beloved, and all that are his, for his ſake.

For God is love] Not formally, but cauſally, ſay Schoolmen; he is the fountain of love, and draws all hearts that have any knowledge of him. See *ver.*16. *Cant.*1.3. with the Note.

Verſe 9. In this was manifeſted] The very naked bowels of his tendereſt compaſſions are herein laid open unto us, as in an anatomy. God ſo loved his ſon, that he gave him the world for his poſſeſſion, *Pſal.*2.7. but he ſo loved the world, that he gave Son and all for its redemption.

Verſe 10. Not that we loved, &c.] Deus prior nos amavit, tantus, tantùm, & gratis, tantillos & tales. God, though ſo great, loved us firſt and freely, though ſuch and ſo worthleſs. He loved us, becauſe he loved us, ſaith Moſes, Deut.7.7,8. the ground of his love being wholly in himſelf. He works for his own names ſake, *Ezek.*20.8,14,44,22. four ſeveral times, notwithſtanding his word and oath, 13,15,23.

Verſe 11. If God ſo loved us] His one example eaſily anſwereth all our objections, taketh off all our excuſes. As that our brother is our inferiour, our adverſary, of whom we have better deſerved, &c.

Verſe 12. No man hath ſeen God] If we read that any hath ſeen him, we muſt underſtand it, that indeed they did ſee Mercavah, velo harocheb, the chariot in which God rode, but not the rider in it, as that Rabbi ſpeaketh. Rab. Maim. more Nevochim. l.3.c.7.

His love is perfected in us] i.e. Either actively, our love is demonſtrated in the excellency of it. Or elſe paſſively; the love that God beareth to us, is abundantly declared perfect, in that he worketh ſuch a gracious inclination in us. And in this later ſenſe underſtand the Apoſtle *ver.*17. touching love made perfect.

Verſe 13. He hath given us of his ſpirit] That is, of the fruits of his Spirit, his holy motions and graces. For thorow the two golden pipes the two Olive-branches empty out of themſelves the golden oils of all precious graces, into the Candleſtick, the Church.

Verſe 14. And we have ſeen] ſc. By ſpecial priviledge (that which natural eye never ſaw, *v.*12.) the back-parts of Jehovah, his wiſdom, juſtice, mercy, &c. we can ſee no more and live, we need ſee no more that we may live.

Verse 15. Whosoever shall confess] See the note on 1 *Cor.*12.3.

Verse 16. And we have known and believed] That is, we know by believing. See the Note on Joh. 6.69.

God is love] Pellican tells of some in his time, that used to read this piece of Scripture to their friends at their feasts. A pious practice surely, and well beseeming those that feast before the Lord. The Primitive Christians had at such times their kiss of love, 1 *Pet.*5.14. And S. Austin had these two verses written on his Table,

Quisquis amat dictis absentum rodere famam,
Hanc mensam vetitam noverit esse sibi.

Verse 17. In the day of judgement] Those that bear his image shall hear his Euge; he will own them and honour them; and their faith, that worketh by love, shall be found unto praise, honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ, 1 *Pet.*1.7. He that was so willingly judg'd for them, shall give no hard sentence against them.

Verse 18. There is no fear in love] But complacence and acquiescence in the person beloved.

Beda in Prov.1. Perfect love casteth out fear] Timorem scilicet servilem illum, non amicalem.

Because fear hath torment] Quem metuunt, oderunt. Whomsoever men fear, they hate, saith the Proverb. And odium timorem sitit, saith Tertullian. Hatred hath fear, which sets the soul on a rack, as it were, and renders it restless.

Verse 19. Because he first loved us] See the Note on *vers.*10. Mary answers not Rabboni till Christ first said unto her Mary. Our love is but the reflex of his. And as the reflected beams of the Sun are weaker then the direct, so are our affections weaker then Gods. That's a memorable saying of a Modern writer; As a great brightness of the ayr at midnight argueth the shining of the Moon, and that presumeth an illumination of the Sun, because these depend one upon another; so the diffusing of our charity on our neighbours, proveth our love to God; and our love to God presumeth his love to us first, for the inseparable dependance they have on each other.

Verse 20. If a man say, I love God] If he did so, he would hardly say so in a vaunting way howsoever. Charity vaunteth not it self; is not puffed up, 1 *Cor.*13.4. Christ loves secret service, *Cant.*2.14. They that bear him greatest love, make least shew thereof before others. Master Bartlet Green, when he had been beaten and scourged with rods by Bishop Bonner, and he greatly rejoyced in the same (saith Master Fox) yet his shamefac'd modesty was such, that he would never express any mention thereof (lest he should seem to glory too much in himself) save that only he opened the same to one Mr. Cotton of the Temple (a friend of his) a little before he suffered Martyrdom:

Act. and Mon. 1684.

Seneca. Vasa quæ magis continent, minus sonant. But empty Casks sound loudest; and baser mettals ring shrilleft.

Whom he hath seen] Sight usually maketh love. Juvenal greatly wondereth at one, Qui nunquam visæ flagrabat amore puellæ, who loved a party whom he had never seen.

D. Rainolds. How can he love God] That is (saith a reverend man) He that cannot endure nor look on that little glimpse and ray of holiness which is in his brother, in one of the same infirmities and corruptions with himself, will much less be able to abide the light of the Sun of righteousness, and the most orient, spotless and vast holiness that is in him.

Verse 21. And this commandment we have from him] Lo here a singular evidence of Gods great love to us, that he commandeth us also the love of our neighbor as well as of himself: quasi non tam de se amando fuerit sollicitus, quam de proximo vestro diligendo, saith Aretius. Our Saviour therefore, summing up the Law, joyneth those two precepts, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all, &c. And, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy self. Yea God prefers mercy before sacrifice; and is content that his own immediate service should be intermitted, rather then offices of love to our brother omitted. Leave there thy gift, and go thy way; first be reconciled, Mat.5.24.

Love his brother also] If he be a good man, love him in God; if bad, for God.

Verſe 2. That we love the children of God] Really, aright, and not for ſelf or ſiniſter reſpects. Godlineſs begins in the right knowledge of our ſelves, and ends in the right knowledge of God. His commandments are not] See the Note on Mat. 11. 30.

Verſe 4. Even our faith] Which ſhews a man a better project, puts his head into heaven afore-hand, gives him to taſte of the hidden manna. Now his mouth will not water after homely proviſions, that hath lately taſted of delicate ſuſtenance. Are we afraid of men, ſaith one? Faith ſets hell before us. Are we allured by the world? Faith ſets heaven before us. It was by the force of his Faith, that Luther brake out into thoſe words, Contemptus eſt à me Romanus & favor, & furor. I care neither for Romes fawnings nor frownings.

Verſe 5. But he that believeth] A believer walketh about the world as a conqueror. He ſaith of theſe things here below, as Socrates did when he came into a Fair, and ſaw there ſundry commodities to be ſold, Quam multis ego non egeo? Nec habeo, nec careo, nec curo, as another ſaid, I neither have theſe things, nor need them, nor care for them. He hath his feet, where other mens heads are, Prov 15. 24. Rev. 12 1. He ſets not his deſire upon the Aſſes, ſith he is aſſured of the Kingdom. He looks upon the world as Hiram did on the cities Solomon had given him, which he called Chabul, that is, the land of dirt. His eye is upon Uranople, the new Jeruſalem, the crowns and palms of that golden countrey. Children admire gawds and gugaws; but let a Nobleman (that hath been uſed to the pomp and bravery of the Court) paſs by a whole ſtall of ſuch toys and trifles, he never caſts his eye toward them.

Verſe 6. That came by water and blood] So to fulfill and anſwer the legal waſhings and ſacrifices, ſo to ſignifie that he juſtifieth none by his merit, but whom he ſanctifieth by his Spirit: and ſo to ſet forth the two Sacraments of the New Teſtament. See the Note on Joh. 19. 34.

Verſe 7. Three that bear record] viz. That Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God. Theſe three heavenly Witneſſes have given teſtimony hereof in earth. See the Note on Joh. 5. 32. & 8. 18.

Theſe three are one] In eſſence and will. As if three lamps were lighted in one chamber, albeit the lamps be divers, yet the lights cannot be ſevered; ſo in the God-head, as there is a diſtinction of perſons, ſo a ſimplicity of nature.

Verſe 8. The Spirit and the water] The Spirit of ſanctification teſtified by ſaving graces and new divine gifts, the water of repentance, and the blood of Chriſt applied by faith. Theſe be the three Witneſſes of a mans happineſs here. When the waters of ſanctification are troubled and muddy, let us run to the witneſs of blood.

Verſe 9. If we receive, &c.] If two or three witneſſes eſtabliſh a truth with men, ſhall we deny that honour to Gods teſtimony?

Verſe 10. Hath the witneſs in himſelf] Carries in his heart the counterpane of all the promiſes.

Hath made him a lyar] As one may deny God in deed, as well as in word, ſo he may give him the lye too in like manner, ſc. by going away, and not heeding all the grace that he offereth by Chriſt: for ſuch a one ſaith in effect, Tuſh, there is no ſuch thing as Chriſt; or at leaſt no ſuch benefit to be reaped by his paſſion, as they would perſwade us, &c.

Verſe 11. That God hath given to us, &c.] How plain is the holy Scripture in things needfull to ſalvation? Theſe God hath written for us, as it were, with the beam of the Sun, that none may plead difficulty. But we are, most of us, of the Athenian strain, of whom Tully says the Proverb went, Athenienses scire quæ recta sunt, sed facere nolle, that they knew what was right, but had no mind to make use of it. Cic. de senect.

Verse 12. Hath life] For he is the Prince and principle of life; and all out of him are dead whiles they live. Non ille diu vixit, sed diu fuit, saith Seneca of one: Non multum navigavit, sed multum jactatus est, of another at Sea: he was long, but lived little; he was much tossed, but not much furthered; he moved much, but removed not at all, as a horse in a mill, as a dog in a wheel, &c. See the Note on Job 1. 4.

And he that hath not the Son, hath not life] Negatio contrarii auget vim affirmationis. 1 Kin. 20. 1. Deut. 33. 6. Prov. 30. 11. 1 Sam. 1. 11. See the Note on Joh. 1. 20

Verse 13. That ye may know that ye have eternal life] Sc. In the pledges and first fruits of it, in the true graces of the Spirit, whereof there are many marks and evidences laid down in this Epistle, that we might be at a certainty: not a certainty of hope onely (as Papists foolishly distinguish) but of faith too: even a full assurance.

That ye may believe] That ye may be confirmed, continued and increased in it.

Verse 14. According unto his will] One said, he could have what he would of God; and, Fiat voluntas mea, said Luther in a certain prayer, but then he finely falls off with Mea voluntas Domine, quia tua; Let my will be done, Lord, but so far forth as it is thy will. This was when he prayed for the life of Miconius (who was fallen into a deep consumption) and prevailed with God for it.

Verse 15. We know that we have] Iste vir potuit quod voluit, That man could do what he would with God, said one concerning Luther. See the Note on Joh. 15. 16.

We have the petitions that we desired of him] If we can perceive and discern that God listneth, the thing is done. Now the former we may finde, First, by a cast of Gods countenance, by a smile of his face, Psal. 22. 24. Psal. 34. 15. for a godly man is admitted to see as well as speak: like a good Angel, he is ever looking on the face of God; and can gather by that, how he shall speed in his suit. The upright shall dwell in his presence, Psal. 140. 13. when the hypocrite shall not come before him, Job 13. 16. Secondly, By the answer of a mans own conscience, 1 Joh 3. 20. God answers us by this, as he did the high Priest by Urim and Thummim, and as he answered Eliah by fire from heaven that consumed his sacrifice. This faithfull Petitioners seldom fail of. Psal. 35. 13. Psal. 6. 8, 9. Phil. 4. 6, 7.

Verse 16. A sin which is not unto death] When John Frith and Andrew Hewet were at the stake, Dr. Cook openly admonished all the people, that they should in no wise pray for them, no more then they would do for a dog; at which words Frith smiling, desired the Lord to forgive him. In its own nature all sin is mortal: but in a Saint, being tempered with faith and repentance, it is as quick-silver tempered with ointment and killed. Act. and Mon. fol. 946.

There is a sin unto death] That unpardonable sin of doing despite to the Spirit of grace. Rockwood a chief persecutour at Callice in the days of Henry the Eight, to his last breath staring and raging, cryed, He was utterly damned; and being willed to ask God mercy, he brayed and cryed out, All too late; for I have sought maliciously the deaths of a number of the honestest men in the Town, whom I knew to be so; All too late therefore, All too late. Another that had committed this sin to death, wished that his wife and children and all the world might be damned together with him. Ibid. 1119. Mr. Burroughs Mos. choice.

Verse 17. There is a sin not unto death] All sins and blasphemies shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy-ghost, &c. See the Note on Matth. 12. 31, 32. Every sin (in the desert considered) hales hell at the heels of it. Flagitium & Flagellum ut acus & filum; there is no venial sin in it self. But the unpardonable sin is here distinguished from all other sins, First, by the nature of it; it is not any one sin against the law, nor yet is it the direct breach of the whole law, Heb. 10. 28 but it is a sin against the Gospel; a wilfull and malicious refusing of pardon upon such terms as the Gospel offereth it, scorning to be beholden to God for any such free favour. Secondly, By the effect, it is a sin unto death, it is infallibly damning, there is no expiation, but a certain fearfull expectation of fiery indignation to devour these adversaries, Heb. 10. 27. God not suffering himself to be derided, nor his Spirit to be despited, smites them with an incurable blindness and reprobacy of mind: whereupon follows, 1 An impossibility of repentance, Heb. 6. 6. 2 A desperate fury whereby they continue raving and and raging both against the Physick and the Physician, to their own endless ruth and ruine.

Verse 18. Sinneth not] sc. That sin to death, v. 16. nor other sins, as other men do. See the Note on Chap. 3. 9.

And that wicked one toucheth him not] viz. Tactu qualitativo, as Cajetan expoundeth it, with a deadly touch: he thrusts not in his sting so far as to infuse the venom of that sin that is properly his sin, Joh. 8. 44. and with which he toucheth their spirits that become the serpents seed. He toucheth them not so, as the needle is touched by the Loadstone; so as to partake of his devilish spirit, and to be wholly carried after him.

Verse 19. Lieth in wickedness] As a lubber in a lake, as a carcase in its slime. In fermento tota jacet uxor, saith he in Plautus. This people is wholly set upon wickedness, said Aaron, Exod. 32. 22. is under the power and vassallage of the devil; Nil mundum in mundo. Nihil aliud est totus mundus ante conversionem, nisi aut hara porcorum, aut colluvies rabidorum canum, saith Austin. The whole world, before conversion, is no better then a filthy Hog-stie, or a Kennel of mad dogs.

Verse 20. And we know] This he brings in here for a Corollary and conclusion of all.

Verse 21. Keep your selves from idols] Negatively at least (as those 7000. in Israel, that had not bowed their knees to Baal) if not positively, by open declaration of your utter dislike, as did Daniel and his associates. Irenaus reproveth the Hereticks called Gnostici, for that they carried about the Image of Christ in Pilates time, after his own proportion; using also, for declaration of their affection towards it, to set garlands upon the head of it: so soon crept this cursed sin into the Primitive Church. Soon after the Council of Nice, arose a sharp contention between Irene the Empress, and her son Constantine 6. who destroyed Images; for the which she unnaturally put out his eyes. About which time, as Entropius writeth, the Sun was darkned most terribly for 17. days together: God shewing by that, how much he misliked those proceedings: Letters were sent by Q. Mary and her Council, to examine Mr. Flower why he wore about his neck written, Deum time, idolum fuge; and to stir up B. Bonner to proceed against all that did the like. Arguments and Authorities alledged by Bishop Ridley against Images in Churches may be read, Act. and Mon. fol. 1928, &c. Martin was much grieved that this sentence of St. John was set in our Churches, in the place where the Rood-loft formerly stood.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1929.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the ſecond Epiſtle of S. Iohn.

Chap. I.

Verſe 1. The Elder to the elect Lady]

Almeron the Jeſuite ſaith (but very abſurdly) that Seneca's letters to S. Paul, and S. Pauls to Seneca (as they are called) are for matter not much unlike this of S. Iohn to the elect Lady, and to Gaius, and that of S. Paul to Philemon. Iudicium ſit penes lectorem. Me thinks they are more like then Harp and Harrow. See the Note on Philemon, v. 19. That cenſure paſſed on him by Eraſmus, is very right: Si legas, &c. If thou read Seneca as a Pagan, he wrote Chriſtianly; but if as a Chriſtian, he wrote Paganiſhly.

Verſe 2. For the truths ſake] This is the love that will hold again, and is a ſure ſign of love unfained, when it is thus well founded. Sinifterity is oppoſite to ſincerity. Some love the Saints as Iſaac loved Eſau, for the veniſon that he brought him, &c.

Verſe 3. Grace be with you, &c.] This bleſſing belongs not only to the Lady and her children, but to all that rightly read and hear the words of this Epiſtle, Rev. 1. 13.

Verſe 4. I rejoyced greatly] This cheared up his good old heart more then any outward reſpects or courteſies whatſoever. See 1 Theſ. 3. 8.

I found] ευρηκα, I found by long and diligent obſervation, that which was worth finding; ευρημα.

Of thy children] Not all, but ſome of them. It is ſeldom ſeen that all a whole family are right for Religion. Noah had a Ham, Abraham an Iſmael, Iſaac an Eſau, &c.

As we have received a Commandment] The Goſpel alſo commands obedience, and holy converſation. Of unruly Chriſtians, profligate profeſſors, we may ſay, There's nothing Chriſtian in them; as of Cowards they were wont to ſay at Rome, there was nothing Roman in them. Truly, either this is not Goſpel (ſaid Learned Linaker, when when he had read our Saviours Sermon in the mount) or we are not Gospellers. A young man told the Senators of Rome, that he came for to see Rome, and found it not: for, said he, Either ye be not Romans of Rome, or else this is not Rome of the Romans. We may even marvel as much as Constantius the Emperor did, and say with him, I wonder how it comes to pass, that many of my people are worse now, then before they became Christians.

Walking in the truth Not taking a step or two, not breaking or leaping over the hedge to avoid a piece of foul way, but persisting in a Christian course, &c. not starting aside to the right hand or the left.

Verse 5. Not as though I wrote a new Commandment. A new commandment our Saviour calleth it, Joh. 13.34. Quia exuto veteri induit nos novum hominem, as Justin gives the reason; because the old man being put off, it puts on us the new man. Or, as others, because that when the Scribes and Pharisees by false glosses and corrupt interpretations had put it out of date, Christ restored it by a true interpretation, Mat. 5.43 44 45 &c. and revived and illustrated it by his own practise and example, as Paul also observeth, Eph. 5.2. Phil. 1.9.

That we love. &c.] God lays no other commands upon us then what we may perform by love, that lightneth and sweeteth all. His subjects and souldiers are all voluntiers, Psal. 110.3.

Verse 6. As ye have heard] He studiously declines the suspition of novelty. Τὸ καινὸν καινόν. See the Note on 1 Joh. 2.7.

Verse 7. For many deceivers] Gr. Cheaters, cozeners, such as can cog a Die to deceive the unskilfull, Eph. 4.14. cast a mist to delude even the quick-sighted. πλάνοι.

Are entred into the world] Where the Church also sojourneth; as the unclean beasts were together with the clean in Noahs Ark; or as Esau was in the same womb and afterwards in the same family with Jacob; or as theeves lodge in the same Inn with true men; who should therefore be sober and watch. Mundus Medæa est, Jasonis, hoc est Satanæ sponsa, The world is the Spouse of Satan; and yet the godly must lie as it were in the lap of this Dalilah. Let Sampson look to his locks. Arctius.

Verse 8. That we lose not &c.] The godly, when they fall into foul courses, or grow remiss and leave their first love, may lose what they have wrought, 1. In respect of the praise of men. 2. In respect of their own former feelings of Gods favour. 3. In respect of the fulnes of their reward in heaven. The Nazarite that broke his vow, was to begin all anew, Numb 6.

Verse 9. Hath not God] And so consequently, hath nothing. Habet omnia qui habet habentem omnia, He hath all, that hath the Haver of all: But sine Deo omnis copia est egestas. Plenty without God becomes penury. The wicked for want of God, in the fulnes of his sufficiency is in straits, Job 20.22. as he that hath God for his portion, in the fulnes of his straits, is in a sufficiency. Aug. Bern.

Verse 10. And bring not this doctrine] If he hold not the foundation, but be found Heterodox and heretical.

Receive him not, &c.] Illam domum in qua fuerit inventus hæreticus diruendam decernimus: Down with that house, that harbors an Heretick, said the Councel of Tholouse in their Constitution against the Albigenses, whom they mistook for hereticks.

Neither bid him God speed] Shew not love, where you ow nothing but hatred. I hate every false way, saith David. And I shall look upon Auxentius, as upon a devil, so long as he is an Arrian, said Hilarius. St. John sprang out of the Bath wherein Cerinthus the Heretick was washing, and said, Let us be gone, lest the house fall on our heads.

Verse 11. Is partaker of his evil] 1. By his sinful silence and dissimulation. 2. Next, by confirming the sinner in his evil way. 3. Lastly, by offence given to others.

Verse 12. That our joy may be full] See, saith one, an Apostle furthered and quickned by the graces of a woman. When such Grandees in grace have benefit by communion of Saints, how much more they whose measures are less?

Verse 13. The children of thine elect] Who probably sojourned with S. John for education-sake. The Lady might say to the Apostle, as he in Virgil did to Æneas, ——sub te tolerare magistro

Militiam—tua cernere facta
Assuescant, primis & te mirentur ab annis.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the third Epistle of S. Iohn.

Chap. I.

Verse 1. Unto the wel-beloved Gaius]

Rom. 16. 23. 1 Cor. 1. 14.

ἐυσεβεῖαι.

ARich Corinthian, rich in this world, and rich in good works: A rare bird, at Corinth especially; where St. Paul found them the richer the harder, and far behinde the poor Macedonians in works of charity.

Verse 2. That thou maist prosper] Gr. That thou maist make a good voyage of it, and come safe and sound to thy journeys end.

Even as thy soul prospereth] By the blessing of him that dwelt in the bush, Deut. 33. 16. Now the soul prospereth, when it hath close communion with God, and enjoys the light of his loving countenance, preferring his favour before the worlds warm Sun.

Lipsius conqueritur desisse homines non modò laudanda facere, sed laudare. l. 2. ep. 70

Verse 3. Testified of the truth] This was their ingenuity, thus, at least, to requite their Host, by giving testimony of his liberality, and this his liberality proved the truth of his faith, and his good estate to God-ward, as did Dorcasses garments made for the poor.

Verse 4. I have no greater joy] See the Note on 2 Joh. 4.

Walk in truth] Not walk to the Ale-house, walk about with tales to shed blood, walk after the flesh, as too many of our hearers do, to our singular heart-break.

Verse 5. Thou dost faithfully] That is, out of faith, and as beseemeth a faithful Christian. They that give alms, &c. and not out of faith, they do worse then lose their labor; for they commit sin.

And to strangers] Though they be not yet converted to the faith, and made brethren, thy liberality may work upon them, and win them, as Alban.

Ἀξίως τῦ Θεῦ.

Verse 6. After a godly sort] Gr. Worthy of God, as seeing God in them, and as beseemeth his servants, who are Princes in all lands, Psal. 45.

Verse

Verſe 7. They went forth] To preach, and gain ſouls to God: And this they did gratis, as Paul, becauſe the falſe-apoſtles did ſo at Corinth, ſeeking occaſion againſt the true teachers, 2 Cor. 11, 12.

Verſe 8. That we might be fellow-helpers] And ſo receive a Prophets reward. See the Note on Mat. 10. 41.

Verſe 9. I wrote unto the Church] ſc. Of Corinth, where Paul baptized Gaius, and where Diotrephes ſeems to have been a great Sect-maſter, and chief of thoſe deceitful workers, that there ſo much diſparaged Paul.

Diotrephes, who loveth, &c.] Ambition is like the Crocodile, which groweth as long as it liveth. What ſtirs made proud Paulus Samoſatenus in the Primitive Church? What continual quarrellings were there between the Biſhops of Conſtantinople and of Rome for the primacy? and between the Arch-biſhops of Canterbury, and of York for precedency? What a deal ſuffered learned Zanchy at Argentina from his ambitious colleagues; and divers of our Engliſh Divines and others, from the lordly Prelates? Paræus was wont to ſay, That the chief cauſe of all the Churches troubles was the Churchmens affectation of dominion. This trouble-town if we could caſt out of the Church, ſaid, he, great hopes there were that we ſhould all σὺν τὸ θεῖον πνεῦμα ὁμοφρόνως καὶ ἐνθουσιάζειν συνδεδεμένοι, concur and conſent in one and the ſame truth. Iſidor. Peluſ. l. 4. ep. 54.

Verſe 10. Prating againſt us] One would wonder what he could prate againſt S. John, and yet he did, and that maliciouſly. True it is, he did but trifle and play the fool (as the Greek word ſignifies) in that he prated; but he ſhewed his malice nevertheleſs. So do the Jeſuites, as in many other their practices, ſo in this, that in their writings againſt us, they confirm that with glorious words and arguments, which we ſtick not at; to make the world believe that we deny all that which they ſo buſily and ſo bravely prove, and ſo to make us odious; Whereas they leave the main matter in controverſie utterly unproved, thinking to carry it away with out-facing and great words. The word ſignifieth pompoſè ſed nugacitèr loqui, to talk big bubbles of words, ſaith Aretius; who alſo telleth us that it is a Metaphor taken from over-ſeething pots, that ſend forth a ſome: Or (as others will have it) from overcharged ſtomacks, that muſt needs belch. φλυαρῶν.

Forbiddeth them that would] Such as Gaius was; that himſelf only might have the prick and the praiſe. This is the property of envy, as we ſee in Saul, in the Phariſees, in Tiberius Ceſar, who Tiger-like, laid hold with his teeth on all the excellent ſpirits of his times. Nero etiam omnium erat æmulus, &c. He forbad Lucan the Poet to make verſes, only becauſe he could do it very excellently.

Verſe 11. Follow not] Make not ſuch a man as Diotrephes your pattern for imitation; though he ruffle it amongſt you, and will needs be the only man.

Hath not ſeen God] ſc. With the eyes of his mind, whatever he may boaſt of viſions or revelations; believe him not.

Verſe 12. Of all men] Of all good men; for God reckons of men according to their goodneſs. As a good name only is a name, Eccl. 7. 1. and a good wife only a wife. Prov. 8. 22.

And of the truth it ſelf] That's enough; Doth the truth report well of a man? then he needs not care what the world can ſay.

And ye know that our record is true] This is one of Iohn the Evangeliſt his praiſes, John 21. 24. and may confirm that he was the Author of this and the two former Epiſtles. For his truth, we may better ſay of him then Sophronius doth of Iohn Chryſoſtom, Nunquam eum mentitum fuiſſe, that he never told lye; and that he was eximium orbis terrarum luminare, as Theodoret ſtiles him.

Yea, and we alſo] Which we do not uſe to do without ſpecial caution. It is a fault to be too forward to teſtifie of any.

Verſe 13. I will not with ink] In vain is the word written in books, unleſs it be alſo written in our hearts, Ier. 31.

With paper] Which was of old made of a certain plant of Nilus called Papyrus but now it is made of rags, miro ingenio, & utili rebus mortalium, to the great benefit of mankind. Aretius.

Verſe 14. But I truſt] He could promiſe nothing peremptorily, but ſubmits to God. See the Note on Iam. 4. 15.

Face to face] As iron whets iron, ſo doth the face of a man his friend.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the Epistle generel of S. Iude.

Chap. I.

Verse 1. Iude the servant]

TO distinguish him from Iudas the traitour, lest he should suffer by mistake, as Nicolas the Deacon is thought to do, as if he were author of the Sect of the Nicolaitans, which Christ hated. This Iude or Iudas, was also sirnamed Lebbeus, that is hearty: as Hooper the Martyr was called hearty Hooper. He was indeed an hearty friend to the truth, earnestly contending for the Faith once delivered unto the Saints; and a hammer against Hereticks, whom he describeth here to the life, and opposeth them to his utmost.

Hæreticorum malleus.

To them that are sanctified] Or To them that are beloved, as other copies have it.

Preserved] Kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, 1. Pet. 2. 5.

Verse 2. Mercy unto you, &c.] Mercy from the Father, peace from the Son, and love from the holy Ghost.

Verse 3. Of the common salvation] That wherein all Saints have a share.

For the faith] That faith of the Gospel, Phil. 1. 27. the doctrine of faith.

Once delivered] Once for all, not only as but one only rule, but as but once sent to a Nation. So that if lost, or any way corrupted, it will not be given again; another edition of it is not to be expected. Contend earnestly for it therefore, conflict one after another, as the word signifies. Hold fast the faithful word, as with both hands. Tit. 1. 9. See the Note. Resolve either to live with the Gospel, or to die for it. Be zealous in the defence of it, and strive your utmost. When Carolostadius opposed Luthers Consubstantiation, but weakly, faintly and insufficiently, Zuinglius said he was sorry that so good a cause wanted shoulders.

shoulders. In the conference at Bossacum in France, Beza (Speaker for the Protestants) entring into the matter of the Eucharist, spake with such heat, that he gave but ill satisfaction to those of his own party (saith the Authour of the history of the Council of Trent) so that he was commanded to conclude. How true this is I know not; sure it is, that in falling forward is nothing so much danger as in falling backward; So he that contendeth earnestly for the truth, though he may carry some things indiscreetly, yet he is far better then a faint chapman, or a feeble champion. Austin was much heartened and hardened in his Manichism, because he met with weak Opponents, such as his nimble wit could easily overturn. Fol. 453.

Verse 4. For there are certain men] Not worthy to be named, as that rich glutton, Luke 16.

Crept in unawares] Stealing their passage; and making as if they minded nothing less. Thus Socrates (the writer of the Ecclesiastical history) was a close Novatian, as the learned Jacobus Billius observeth: he favoureth that heresie all along his history, sed ita oblique, ut minus perspicaci Lectori non tam doloris sui atque iræ obsequi quàm veritatis rationem habere videatur, but he doth it so cunningly, that a man would think he did it out of pure regard to the truth. So Spondanus the Epitomizer of Baronius, drinks to his Readers the pernicious poison of Hildebrands heresies, quasi aliud agens, as if he intended no such matter. παρεισδυ̃σι. Observat. Sacrar. l. 1. c. 26. Deg. Whear. Relect. p. 217.

Ordained to this] Gr. Written down, enrolled, set down in the black bill. προγεγραμμένοι.

Turning the grace of our God] Gr. Translating it from its proper end, perverting it, by arguing from mercy to liberty: which is the devils Logick. Corruptio optimi est pessima. Learned men have conceived (saith Plutarch) that as of Oxen, being dead and rotten, there breed Bees, of Horses Wasps, of Asses Beetles; so mens bodies, when the marrow melteth and gathereth together, do bring forth serpents. The grace of God, if turned into wantonness, becometh the savour of death unto death. Μεταθιθέντες.

Verse 5. Afterward destroyed] Their preservation was but a reservation, as was Senacheribs, Pharaohs, and theirs whom God threatned to destroy, after that he had done them good, Iosh. 24. 20.

Verse 6. Kept not their first estate] Their original integrity or principality. Of this sin of the Angels, the cause was the will of the Angels, good in it self (but mutable and free) not by working neither, but by not working, saith a Divine.

But left their own habitation] Being driven thence and hurried into hell.

He hath reserved in everlasting chains &c.] There are two sorts of chains (saith one) First, Those which torment the devil, Gods wrath and his own conscience. Secondly, Those which restrain him, his own Finiteness, and Gods providence. M. Leigh.

Verse 7. Giving themselves over] In Scortationem effusa, Wearying and wearing themselves out with that beastly sin; as did Proculus Messalina, and Lais, who died in the act of uncleanness. The word here used signifies, saith Aretius, Scortationi immersi, & contabescere illius desiderio. To waste and consume with that cursed concupiscence. Such an one was that filthy Lecher mentioned by Luther, who desired no other heaven then to live always here, and be carried from one stews to another. He dyed betwixt a couple of notorious strumpets. ἐκπορνεύσασαι τὸν ὅμοιον τρόπον ἐπιθυμίαν ἔχει. Ἀπέθανε βιναμένη. Athen. lib. 13.

And going after strange flesh] See the Note on Gen. 19. 5.

Are set forth] Gr. Are thrown forth. πρόκεινται.

For an example] Herodotus saith the like of the destruction of Troy, that the ruines and rubbish thereof are set forth for an example of this rule, that God greatly punisheth great offences. τῶν μεγάλων ἀδικημάτων μεγάλαι εἰσὶν αἱ τιμωρίαι παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Verse 8. Likewise also] Or, yet nevertheless; albeit these dreadful executions are set before them for an example.

These filthy dreamers] Or, these found sleepers, these whom the devil hath cast into a dead lethargy of damned security. Or, these Nehelamites that pretend dreams and divine inspirations, See Jer. 29. 24, 31. Sopiti. Bezz.

Defile the flesh] By nocturnal pollutions, which we must pray against. The devil can fasten that filth upon the soul, when we sleep, that he cannot do at another time. Ἀθετοῦσι.

Despise Dominion] Gr. Set it at nought. See the Note on 2 Pet. 2. 10. Under pretence of Christian liberty, they set it aside, they put it from its place with scorn and contempt.

And speak evil of dignities] Gr. Blaspheme glories: so the Papists do familiarly those those Princes they count hereticks; as Henry the fourth of France whom they called Huguenot-dog, &c. Our Edward the sixth bastard. Of Qu. Elizabeth they reported in print some years after her death, That she died without sense or feeling of Gods mercies. Sanders calleth her the English Wolf; Rhiston, the English Lioness, far surpassing in cruelty all the Athaliah's, Maachas, Jesabels, Herodiasses that ever were. Os durum!

Rivetti Iesuita vapulans. 263.

Verse 9. About the body of Moses] As desirous thereby to set up himself in the hearts of the living. There is a strange strife still, not of earthly, but of spiritual powers, about the possession of mans heart. If Satan can get that, he is safe. And so Satans Vicar. It was a watchword in Gregory the 13. time, in Q. Elizabeths days, My son, give me thy heart. Be in heart a Papist, and go where you will, and do what you will.

Durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee] Let us also answer the devil in like sort: Or as Grynæus (out of Chrysostom) when he sent back Pistorius his railing letters, not so much as opening the seal, Inhonestum est honestam matronam cum meretrice litigare. It is not seemly for an honest matron to scold with a base harlot.

Verse 10. Of those things which they] So do the Papists in railing against imputed righteousness, assurance of salvation, the testimony of Gods Spirit witnessing with our spirits, &c.

In those things they corrupt themselves] As in eating, drinking carnal copulation, &c. holding neither mean nor measure, as he in Aristophanes, ὅστις γυναῖκα δὶς ἢ βινεῖν μόνον, who was good for nothing else but to Epicurize.

In Ranis.

Verse 11. In the way of Cain] The devils Patriarch, the first Apostate: this was fulfilled litterally in Alphonsus Diazius, who slew his brother John, because he was a Protestant: and mystically, in all that are guilty of spiritual parricide.

And ran greedily] Gr. Were powred out, as water out of a bottle; they ran headlong after the wages of wickedness, not caring which way they came by it, so they had it. Instar aquæ diffluentis projecta est eorum intemperies, saith Calvin, their lust-like-water illimited, ran all abroad, &c.

Verse 12. These are spots] Or, Rocks, or muddy-holes, that Harpy-like not only devour, but defile all that they touch.

σπιλάδες: περὶ τὸ σπᾶν ἢ ἕλκειν a trahendo lutum.

In your feasts of charity] See these described by Tertullian. l. adversus gentes, cap. 39.

When they feast with you] Thrusting themselves into your company, whether invited or not: sin having oaded an impudency in their faces.

Feeding themselves] As fatted cattle fitted for the slaughter:

Without fear] Of being ensnared by the creatures, Prov. 23. 2.

Clouds they are] Light and constant only in their inconstancy. The Philosopher saith, Insalubre admodum cælum est quod pluviam promittit non demittit. That's an unwholsom air that promiseth rain, but performs it not. It is ill conversing with these waterless clouds.

Twice dead] Killed with death, Rev. 2. 23. Such as for whom hell gapeth.

Plucked up by the roots] Trees that are not for fruit, are for the fire.

Verse 13. Raging waves of the sea] Unsetled, turbulent and arrogant spirits: boldly belching out their abominable opinions and detestable doctrines.

Wandering stars] That were never better then Meteors. S. Francis Drake in his travels reporteth, That in a certain Island to the Southward of Celebes, among the trees night by night did shew themselve an infinite swarm of fiery seeming worms, flying in the air, whose bodies no bigger then an ordinary flie, did make a shew, and give such light, as if every twig on every tree had been a lighted candle, or as if that place had been the starry sphere. Lo such were these impostors.

Verse 14. And Enoch also] Enoch fore-told the day of Judgement before Noah the deluge. That day is longer before it comes, but shall be more terrible when it is come.

Behold] One calleth this word a starry Note; Another compares it to an hand in the margent of a book pointing to some notable thing; Another compares it to the sounding of a trumpet before some Proclamation, to procure attention; And it is no more then need, so heedless we are of our souls health. Hence the Heathens Hoc agite, in their sacred services. And the Deacons in Chrysostoms time were appointed to call ofs upon the people in these words, Oremus, attendamus, Let us pray, let us mark. I am afraid, saith a Divine, most of us do believe the predictions of Scripture, but as we believe the pre-predictions of an Almanack, which tels you that such a day will be rain, and such a day will be wind; You think it may come to pass, and it may not. So here such a threatning may be fulfilled, and it may not; Let us venture it; It may be the Lord will deal with us not according to his present manaces, but according to all his wonderous works, as those rebellious Jews suggested to Jeremy, chap. 21 2.

The Lord cometh] Syr. Maranatha. Hence the Jews say, that the great excommunication Maranatha was instituted by Enoch.

With ten thousand of his Saints] Or, with his holy myriads; sc. of Saints and Angels; he shall not leave one of them behind him in heaven, Mat. 25. 31. And whereas it is said, The Lord cometh, it shews that he is already on his way, and will be with us shortly. Where S. Jude had this prophecy of Enoch, it much matters not. The Jews have yet at this day some reliques of it in their writings. And Tertullian tels us (but who told him I know not) that the book of Enochs prophesies were preserved by Noah in the Ark, and that they continued, and were read until the times of the Apostles. But because they contained many famous testimonies concerning Jesus Christ, the Jews out of malice, suppress'd and abolished the whole book. Tertul. l. de habitu mulierum.

Verse 15. To convince all] To set them down, to leave them excuseless, speechless, self-condemned. ἐλέγξαι.

Of all their hard speeches] Their rude, crude, crooked, cross speeches, uttered with perverse lips; so Solomon cals them, Prov. 4. 24. as if the upper lip stood where the nether lip should.

Verse 16. These are murmurers] Ut porci saginati, saith Aretius, as boars in a frank, they grunt against Gods ways and worshippers, like so many Cani Grunnii Corocotta.

Complainers] Invalidum omne naturâ querulum, saith Seneca. Weak ones are never without their ailments.

After their own lusts] So many lusts, so many Lords.

Great swelling words] Bubbles of words. See the Note on 2 Pet. 2. 18. The Syriack renders it, stupendious stuff. They amaze their hearers with sesquipedalian words, and sublime businesses, big-swoln fancies, &c. they tell them they shal hear that which they never heard before, and therefore call upon them to mark; when as the thing is either false, or if true, no more then ordinarily is taught by others: with as much confidence as ignorance they counsel the simple by portentous words and phrases abhorrent from Christian religion, truth and sobriety; and which wise men lament whiles fools applaud and admire.

Having mens persons] Licking up their spettle, as it were, and loading the Mouse with the Elephants praises. Ungunt pariter & emungunt.

Verse 17. Of the Apostles] Paul and Peter, from whom Saint Jude borroweth much of this his Epistle. See my Preface to Gods love tokyns.

Verse 18. Mockers] Who sneer when they should fear. See the Note on 2 Pet. 3. 3.

Who should walk after their ungodly lusts] Gr. The lusts of ungodlinesse, whereby the heart is turned away from God, and godliness.

Verse 19. Who separate] From Church-assemblies, upon pretence of newer lights, greater holiness. The Arabick renders it, Intermitters, sc. of Church-worship. Such as upon pretence of a more then ordinary holiness, and I know not what imaginary perfection, thought they might give over hearing of the word, as having immediate teaching; and separated from holy duties, as the words following shew.

Sensual] Gr. Animal; such as have no more then a reasonable soul, and are yet in their pure naturals, 1 Cor. 2. 14. and by their profane practices animas etiam incarnaverunt, have turned their very spirits into a lump of flesh. ψυχικοὶ.

Having not the spirit] Unless it be the spirit of delusion, as Muncer the Anabaptist had, who wrote a book against Luther, dedicated it To the most illustrious Prince Christ, (as his words are) upbraideth Luther with want of the Spirit, and calleth him a carnal man, a silly soul, &c. Sculet. Annal. 338.

Verse 20. Building up] By holy conference, a singular help, a most needful, but too much neglected duty.

Praying in the holy Ghost] Whole creature fervent prayer is.

Verse 21. Keep your selves] Remit nothing of your former fervour. But keep afoot and and alive that twofold love of God; 1. That of Deſire, and earneſt delight and intenſe longing after him, as our chiefeſt Good. 2. Of Delight and complacency, whereby we hug and embrace him, ſolacing our ſelves in the fruition of him.

Verſe 22. And of ſome] Or (according to other copies) Refel their falſe reaſonings, and diſpute them out of their errours.

ἐλέγχετε, alias ἐλέγχετι. Hæc eſt ſancta violentia, optabilis rapina. Hieron. Sueton.

Verſe 23. Out of the fire] viz. of hell: As the Angel pulled Lot out of Sodom, as ye would ſave a drowning man, though ye pulled off ſome of his hair to ſave him. Hic eſt depingendus Satan & Tartarus, & carcer atrociſſimus & luctuoſus, in quo verè ſit ſtridor dentium & fletus, ſaith Aretius. Thoſe that are obſtinate, and receive not reproofs, are to be terrified and told of the horrour of hell, thoſe ſeas of vengeance, that worm that never dyeth, torments without end and paſt imagination.

Even the Garment ſpotted] As Nero's was, when he rode in the ſame horſe-litter with his own mother. The phraſe is thought to be taken either from Legal impurities of leprous garments, by touching of which men were defiled. Levit. 15. Or elſe from the profuſe drunkenneſs and filthineſs of the Gnoſticks, which ſometimes defiled their garments.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION UPON THE REVELATION of St. Iohn the Divine.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. The Revelation]

OR, manifestation of many divine mysteries by the Mediatour (who came out of his Fathers bosome) to Iohn, who had the mind of Christ, and that purposely for the benefit and benefit of the Family of faith, who are all of his Cabinet-councel. Joh. 1. 1 Cor 2. 16. Gal. 6. 10. Psal. 25. 14.

Things which must shortly] That is, sooner or later in their proper season. Gods times seems long, because we are short. Nullum tempus occurrit regi, saith the Lawyer. The Ancient of daies is not to be limited.

Verse 2. Who bare record of the Word] This Iohn the Divine, then, was Iohn the Evangelist, whatever Dionysius of Alexandria dispute to the contrary. It was Moses his honour, (saith One,) who was Gods peculiar favourite, to be penman of the first book of the old Testament: And it was Iohns honour, Christs peculiar favourite, to be penman of the last book of the New Testament.

Verse 3 Blessed is he that readeth] sc. With attention, affection, application and practice; As knowing that this book hath Tot sacramenta, quot verba so many words, so many mysteries; and that these words are Vivenda non legenda, not more to be read then to be lived, as one said once of the hundred and nineteenth Psalm. Neither must we only live up to the words of this prophecy, but dye for it also, and be content to be burned with it, if called thereto; as that holy Martyr who when he saw the Revelation cast into the fire with him, cryed out, O beata Apocalypsis, quam benè mecum agitur qui tecum comburor! O blessed Revelation, how happy am I to be be burned in thy company! Hier. epist. ad Paulin. Aegid. Abbas Norimberg.

Verse 4. From him which is] An august description of the Father by a manifest allusion to Exod. 3. 14. Some Critick reading the words as they lie in Original, would be ἀπὸ ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν.

be apt to complain of an incongruity, and to say, Novè & duriter dictum. But God methinks, should have leave given him by these Logodedali, to pronounce his own name undeclined, and, by an out-rule: who himself is undeclined, and comes not under any rule.

Non debent verba cœlestis oraculi subesse regulis Donati. Greg.

And from the seven spirits] So the holy Ghost is here called, for his manifold gifts and operations, in the hearts of those seven, and all other Churches. In like sort he is called The seven golden pipes thorow which the two olive branches do empty out of themselves the golden oyls of all precious graces into the golden candle-stick the Church, Zach. 4. 2, 3. So some interpret those seven eyes upon one stone, Zach. 3. 9. concerning the Spirit in his several operations upon Christ according to Isa. 11. 2. There is a prophetical perfection of this number of seven, with which the spirit of God is much delighted in this prophecy; seven Churches, seven stars, seven candlesticks, seven lamps, seven seals, &c.

Ver. 5. And from Jesus Christ] Who is here set last of the three persons, because more is to be said of him: both as touching his three-fold office, and a three-fold benefit therehence redounding unto us.

That hath loved us] See Ezek. 16. 6, 8, 9. Christ that heavenly Pelican, revived his dead young-ones with his own heart-blood. He saw the wrath of God burning about them, and cast himself into the midst thereof, that he might quench it. Judah offered to be bound, that Benjamine might go free. Jonathan perilled his life, and quitted his kingdome for love of David. Arsinoe interposed her own body betwixt the murtherers weapons, and her children. But what was all this to this incomparable love of the Lord Jesus? When the Jews saw him weeping for Lazarus, Behold, say they, how he loved him! When wee see him weeping, bleeding, dying for us, shall not we much more say so?

Pierii hieroglyph.

Verse 6. And hath made us Kings] To rule in righteousness, to lord it over our lusts, to triumph over, and trample on all our spiritual adversaries, being more then conquerours thorow him that loved us, and laid down his life for us, that we might raign in life by one Jesus Christ, Rom. 5. 17. And surely if (as Peter Martyr one wrote to Q. Elizabeth) Kings are doubly bound to serve God, both as men, and Kings; What are we, for this spiritual kingdome?

Iudg. 5. 28.

And Priests unto God] To offer up to him the personal sacrifice of our selves, Rom. 12, 1. the verbal of praise, and real of alms, Hebrews, 13. 15, 16. See the Note on 1. Pet. 2. 9.

Verse 7. Behold he commeth] He is already upon the way, and will be with us shortly. Let us hasten his coming, and say as Sisera's mother, Why are his chariots (his clouds) so long in comming? Who tarry the wheels of his chariots?

Shall wail] Gr. Shall smite their breasts or thighs; the elect as repenting, the reprobate as despairing. Iisdem, quibus videmus, oculis, flemus; so here, ὄψονται κὶ ψονται, they shall look and lament.

Verse 8. Which is, and which was] The father is called He that is, Exod. 3. 13. The Son, He that was, Joh. 1. 1. The holy Ghost, He that cometh, Joh. 16. 8, 13. as Aretius observeth. Or, by this Periphrasis may be understood the indererminable eternity of the sonne of God. Much like whereunto both in sound and sense is that which the Heathens ascribed to their Jupiter in that solemn hymne of theirs,

Ζεὺς ἦν, Ζεὺς ἐστὶ, Ζεὺς ἔσσεται, ὦ μέγαλε Ζεῦ,
God was, and God is, God shall be for ever a great God.

Pausan.

Verse 9. In the kingdome and patience] Christ hath a twofold kingdome, 1. Of power. 2. Of patience. Nec nisi per angusta ad Augusta, &c. I have no stronger argument against the Popes kingdome, saith Luther, quàm quod sine cruce regnat, then this that he raigns without the cross. The glory of Christs Church (said George Marsh Martyr) stands not in outward shews, in the harmonious sound of bels and organs, nor yet in the glistering of mitres and copes, &c. but in continual labours and daily afflictions for his Names sake.

Luth. T. 2. Act. and Mon. fol. 1423.

Was in the Isle Patmos] He tels us not how he came thither, he boasteth not of his banishment. Virtus proprio contenta theatro. Vertue is no braggard. Eusebius telleth us, that he was banished thither by Domitian; and that there he wrote his Revelation. In allusion whereunto, Luther called the place Pathmos where he lay hid by the Elector of of Saxony, when the Emperour had proſcribed him, and promiſed a great reward to any one that ſhould bring him alive or dead to the Court. Here it was that Luther tranſlated the New Teſtament into Dutch, and wrote divers uſeful treatiſes, viz. at Wartenburg his Patmos. Sculter. Annal.

Verſe 10. I was in the Spirit] Acted by him, and carried out of himſelf, as the demoniack is ſaid to be in the unclean ſpirit, as being acted and agitated by him. See the Note on 2 Pet. 1. 21.

On the Lords day] The firſt day of the week, the Chriſtian Sabbath, Act. 24. 20. called the Lords-day, from Chriſt the author of it; as is likewiſe the Lords Supper, and the Lords Church, Kirk, κυριακὴ, the very word here uſed. To ſanctifie this Sabbath was in the Primitives a badge of a Chriſtian. For when the queſtion was asked, Servaſti Dominicum? Keepeſt thou the Sabbath? The anſwer was returned, Chriſtianus ſum, intermittere non poſſum, I am a Chriſtian, I muſt keep the Lords-day. This day was alſo called anciently Dies lucis, the Day of light (as Iunius obſerveth) partly becauſe Baptiſm (which the Ancients called φωτισμὸν) was adminiſtred on that day; but principally, becauſe by the duties of this day rightly performed, the minds of men are illuminated, and they tranſlated out of darkneſs into Chriſts marvelous light.

And heard behind me] Not, before me; implying that the Spirit calleth upon us, being ſecure, paſſing by, and not regarding thoſe things it cals for.

As of a trumpet] To teach us that the things here delivered to the Church muſt be ever ſounding in our ears and hearts, indwelling richly in us, Col. 3. 16. I confeſs the matter is very myſterious and obſcure. Hence Cajetans exponat cui Deus conceſſerit, Let him expound it that can; I can ſay little to it. Hence Calvin (as Bodine reports him) being asked his opinion about the Revelation, ingenuouſly confeſſed ſe penitùs ignorare quid velit tam obſcurus ſcriptor, &c. That he for his part knew not what to make of it. Hence alſo Graſerus, Mihi inquis, tota Apocalypſis valdè obſcura videtur; & talis cujus explicatio citra periculum vix queat tentari. Methinks, ſaith He, the whole book of the Revelation is wondrous dark, and indeed ſuch as without danger of doing amiſs a man can hardly take in hand to interpret. I confeſs that I have hitherto profited leſs by the reading of no part of the Bible, then by this ſo very dark a prophecy; Thus He. Howbeit difficulty doth but whet on heroick Spirits; and obſcurity ſhould not weaken but waken our diligence. God would have us to enquire into theſe things, though they be far above us; what elſe meaneth this trumpet, and that bleſſing ſo ſolemnly proclaimed with the ſound of a trumpet, to him that readeth, and thoſe that hear the words of this prophecy? verſ. 3. All cannot read, but all muſt hear. And let him that readeth or heareth, underſtand, Mat. 24. 15. What if there be a veyl laid over this Revelation, will it not be rarified by reading, and by degrees wholly worn away? Eſpecially, if when we open the book we pray with David, Lord open mine eyes, that I may ſee the wondrous things of thy word: And not pray only, but weep, as S. Iohn did, till this ſealed book were opened. Method. biſt. cap. 7.

Verſe 11. Send it to the ſeven] As all holy Scripture, ſo this piece eſpecially may well be called, The Epiſtle of Almighty God to his creature. It is directed to theſe ſeven Churches, becauſe then the moſt famous and flouriſhing. There alſo this Evangeliſt had long time taught; and as ſome ſay, was preſident over them. Greg. Mag.

Which are in Aſia] ſc. in Aſia the leſs, which therefore haply bears the name of the whole, becauſe it was the Aſia of Aſia, like as Athens was called the Greece of Greece.

Verſe 12. And being turned I ſaw] It is well obſerved here by a learned Intepreter, That every godly endeavour doth receive ſome fruit greater then a man can hope for; Iohn turned himſelf to behold the man, and behold (over and beſides) ſeven Candleſticks, which he had not the leaſt ſuſpition of. M. Brightman.

Seven golden Candleſticks] Candleſticks the Churches are called, for the light they have and give; Golden for their worth and price; as much above other men, as gold is above other Metals. As God is the gold of his people (The Almighty ſhall be thy gold, ſaith Eliphaz Iob. 22. 25.) ſo they are his; yea, his peculiar treaſure: they they comprehend all his gettings, Tit. 2, 14. they are the people of his acquisition, 1 Pet 2. 9.

Verse 13, And in the midst] Christ is in the holy assemblies, in the beauties of holiness: he walketh in his garden, Cant. 6 1. he comes in to see his guests, Mat. 22. 11. The face of God is seen in Sion, Psal. 84 7.

A garment down to the feet] As a Councellour, Isa 9. 6.

And girt] It implies readiness, nimbleness, handiness and handsomness. We also must also gird our selves, and serve the Lord Christ, Luke 17. 8.

About the paps] This implies his entire love, seated in the heart.

Verse 14. White like wooll] Noting his antiquity, or rather his eternity and unspeakable purity. Thales, one of the Heathen Sages, called God Diog. Laert. πρεσβύτατον τῶν ὄντων, The most antient of Beings.

As a flame of fire] Sharp and terrible, such as pierce into the inward parts, Heb. 4. 13. See the Note there. The school of nature teacheth, that the fiery eye needeth not outward light; that seeth extra mittendo, by sending out a ray, &c.

Verse 15. And his feet] He stood firm then when he was cast into the fire of his Fathers wrath. He trod the wine-press alone, and set his feet on the necks of all his and our enemies. He lost no ground, when he grappled with the devil on his own dung-hil, Mat. 4. He will also bruise Satan under our feet shortly, Rom. 16. 20.

As the sound of many waters] Audible, terrible, forcible. Some Cataduptes are deafned by the fall of this Nilus. But the Spouse cries out, O thou that dwellest in the Gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice; cause me to hear it. Cant. 8. 13. Som. Scip.

Verse 16. And he had in his right hand] See here the dignity and safety of a faithful Minister. While a child hath his father by the hand, though he walk in the dark, he fears nothing. Godly Ministers not only have Christ by the hand (who as he will not cast away a perfect man, so neither will he take the ungodly by the hand, saith Bildad,] ob 8. 20.) but are held fast in Christs right hand, that teacheth him terrible things, against such as seek to pull them thence. It is well observed by a worthy Writer, that about the time of the silencing of Ministers, many Churches in England were torn at once (within our remembrance) with terrible lightning; and almost no place else but Churches were touched, especially in the lower parts of Devonshire, where many were scorched, maimed, and many had their brains struck out as they sat in Churches; as at the church of Anthony in Cornwal, near Plimmouth on Whitsunday 1640. Psal. 45. 4. See the Relation in Print.

A sharp two-edged sword] The word, like a sacrificing sword, slits open, and as it were, unridgeth the conscience.

Verse 17. I fell at his feet as dead] The nearer anyone come st o Christ, the more rottenness entreth into his bones.

And he laid his right hand] The same right-hand wherein he held the seven stars, verse 16. Christus sic omnibus attentus, ut nullis detentus; sic curat universos quasi singulos; sic singulos quasi solos. Every Godly Minister is Christs particular care.

Fear not] Till rid of fear, we are not fit to hear.

Verse 18. That liveth and was dead] So can every regenerate man say, Luke 16. 32. Ephesians 2. 1. See the Note there. All Saints are heirs of the grace of life, 1 Peter 3. 7.

And have the keyes] The Pope therefore is not key-keeper, as he falsly boasteth, telling us, That God hath put under his feet the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the fish of the sea: that is (as he interprets it) all the souls in earth, heaven, and purgatory. Christ as a conquerour, hath the keyes of hell and death delivered unto him.

Verse 19. Write the things which thou hast seen] That is, the Gospel, the history of Christ (as some think) which he wrote at Ephesus after his return from Pathmos, above fourty years after our Saviours death.

Verse 20. The mystery] In this whole book, there are so many words, so many mysteries: which made Cajetan forbear to comment upon it; though many Monks (far less able then he) thought it a goodly thing to be medling in these mysteries, which they as little understood, as he that derived Apocalypsis of Ἀπό τε, & clipsor, quod est velo, quoth Faber the Augustinian Monk. Apocalypsin fatcor me nescire exponere juxta sensum literalem: exponat cui Deus concesserit. Cajet.

Are the Angels] Ministers are fitly called stars, which affect these inferiour things by motion, light and influence.

Are the seven Churches] Lighted by Christ the high Priest morning and evening continually: and thereby as much differenced from the rest of the world, as Goshen was from Ægypt, in that palpable darkness. But now (alas) they have sinned away the light, and are fearfully darkned. Let us take heed how we put our light, not under a bushel but under a dunghill, as do our Libertines, so that we may well cry out with Polycarp, Deus, ad quæ nos tempora reservasti? Lord, what times are these?

CAP. II.

Verse 1. Unto the Angel]

THis was Timothy, as some think; who not stirring up the gift of God that was in him, had remitted somewhat of his former fervour. By the stile here given him (Angel) he is monished not more of his dignity, then of his duty. That Angel at Bochim, Judg. 2. 1. is thought to have been Phineas. And some interpret that of Solomon, Neither say thou before the Angel, that it was an errour of the Priest. It is good counsel to Ministers that one gives, Angelorum induistis nomen, induite & naturam, ne sit (ut dixit nonnemo) nomen inane, crimen immane. Ye have put on the name, put on also the nature of Angels; lest an empty name fill up the measure of your sins. Eccles. 5. 6.

Of the Church of Ephesus] Languishing Ephesus hath not her name for nought: for she was so named of remisness or slacking her hold, wherewith she is here upbraided. Conveniunt rebus nomina sæpe suis. ἔφεσις vel ἄφεσις, Verse 2. I know thy Works and thy labour] Not thy works only, but thy labour in doing them, and what ends thou puttest upon them. How accurately did our Saviour cast up and count how long the multitude had been with him, how little they had to eat, how ill it would fare with them if sent away fasting, &c. Mat. 15. 32.

And how thou canst not bear] Moved with a zeal of God, and having a stomack for him. Mihi sanè Auxentius nunquam aliud quàm diabolus erit, quia Arrianus, saith Hilary. I shall look upon Auxentius, as upon a devil, so long as he is an Arrian.

Verse 3. And hast born] Bear the false Apostles thou couldst not; but hast born much from them. Morientium nempe ferarum violentiores sunt morsus. Beasts bite hardest when to bite their last.

Verse 4. Thou hast left thy first love] Those first ripe fruits that Christs soul desireth, Mica 7. 1. that kindness of youth, that spousal-love that God so well remembreth, Jer. 2. 2. This Ephesus had left, and so became Apheſis, remiss and wretchless, possest with a spirit of sloth and indevotion. And surely he is a rare and happy man that can say in a spiritual sense (as it was said of Moses) that after long profession of zeal, his sight is not waxed dim, his holy heat not abated, that runs not retrograde, as did Solomon, Asa, others, with whom the end was worse then the beginning.

Verse 5. From whence thou art fallen] viz. From thy former feelings, and present fitness for Gods kingdome, Luke 9. 62.

And repent] See the practice of this second repentance, in the relapsed Spouse returning to her old husband, Cant. 5. See the Note on 2. Cor. 7. 11. See an excellent Letter of the Lady Jane to that apostate Harding, sometime her Chaplain, Act. and Mon. fol. 1292. and what sweet councel Bradford afterwards gave the same Harding, Ib. fol. 1564. besides the example of Mr. Bartlet Green Martyr, fol. 1680.

And do the first works] Begin the world again (as the Nazarite was to do, that had broken his vow, Numb. 6.) and, to set thee up a fresh, make a gathering of prayers, and see that thy works be better at last then at first.

And remove thy Candlestick] Sins are the snuffs that dim our Candlestick, and threaten the removal of it. And surely if we repent not, a removal thereof may be as certainly fore-seen and fore-told, as if visions and letters were sent us from heaven, as to these seven Churches. There is a prophecy in Theleſphorus, reported, that Antichrist shall never overcome Venice, nor Paris, nor London; But we have a more sure word of prophecy here. This nation is ſick of a ſpiritual Pluriſie: we begin to ſurfet on the bread of life. When God ſees his mercies lying under table, tis juſt with him to call to the enemy to take away.

Except thou repent] Minatur deus ut non puniat. God therefore menaceth, that men may be warned. As a Bee ſtings not till provoked; ſo neither doth God puniſh till there be no remedy, 2 Chron. 36. 16. Currat ergo pœnitentia, ne præcurrat ſententia, ſaith One; mittamus preces & lacrymas cordis legatos, ſaith another. Haſte, haſte, haſte, to meet the Lord with entreaties of peace; leſt we be laid waſte as Sodom and deſolate as the people of Gomorrha, Iſa. 1. 9.

Verſe 6. But this thou haſt] That they might not ſay, when called upon to repent, Nay, but there is no hope. Chriſt picks out that which is praiſe-worthy in them, and commends it. Deſpair carries men to hell, as the devils did the ſwine into the ſea, Caſt not away therefore your confidence, &c. Jer. 2. 27. & 18. 12.

The works of the Nicolaitans] Who taught a community of wives, and that it was but a thing indifferent to commit adultery. Irenæus. Theod.

Verſe 7. Let him hear] Not with that griſtle only that grows upon his head, but with the ear of his heart. Let him draw up the ear of his heart to the ear on his head, that one ſound may pierce both. Or, Let him hear what, &c. that is, Let him hear for himſelf, hear and know that (each member for his own good) that was delivered to the whole Church.

To eat of the tree of life] This tree is Chriſt. The devil alſo (as he loves to be Gods ape) hath prompted Mahomet to promiſe to ſuch as die in war for the Mahometan faith, delicious fare in Paradiſe, pleaſant walks, and other ſenſual delights eternally to be enjoyed, notwithſtanding any former ſins. Blunts voyage. p. 67.

Verſe 8. Of the Church in Smyrna] Sweet-ſmelling Smyrna, the pooreſt but pureſt of the ſeven.

Verſe 9. I know thy works and tribulation] Mark (ſaith one) the conjunction, Works and tribulation. Active ſtirring Chriſtians are like to ſuffer much. Of Sardis and Laodicea only, we read not of any troubles they had.

And poverty, but thou art rich] poverty diſcommends not any to Chriſt; money bears no maſtery in his kingdome. Thou art poor, ſaith he here: but that's neither here nor there; its a matter of nothing, that. Stumble not therefore at the Churches poverty. She is ever rich. 1. In reverſion, and hath heaven and happineſs; She is ever rich in bils and bonds. 2. In an apparant pledge that is worth all the world beſides; that is, in Chriſt. If he have given us his ſon, &c. All is yours who are Chriſts, &c. &

That ſay they are Jews] That is, right-worſhippers, as the Turks at this day ſtile themſelves Muſulmans, that is the only true believers, Papiſts the only Catholikes. Faciunt & veſpæ favos, & ſimiæ imitantur homines. Cyprian.

Verſe 10. Fear none of thoſe things] Quit thy heart of that cowardly paſſion, and die rather then deny the truth. Put on that reſolution, Neceſſe eſſe ut eam, non ut vivam. Duty muſt be done, though I die for it.

Behold the devil] viz. By his imps and inſtruments whom he Acts and agitates, Eph. 2. 2. But he and his are over-ruled and limited; for he ſhall caſt ſome of you, not all of you, into priſon, not into hell, that ye may be tried, not deſtroyed; and this, for ten daies only, not for any long continuance.

Be thou faithful unto death] Say as one Martyr did, The heavens ſhall ſooner fall, then I will deny my dear Lord; And as another Martyr, Though you may pluck my heart out of my bowels, yet ſhall you never pluck the truth out of my heart.

A crown of life] A crown without cares, corrivals, envy, end. Kings Crowns are ſo weighty with cares, that oft they make their heads ake. Not ſo this crown; the joyes whereof are without meaſure, or mixture.

Verſe 11. Shall not be hurt of the ſecond death] Shall not be killed with death, as ver. 23. Death ſhall not be to him (as it is to the wicked) a trap-door to hell, but janua vitæ, porta cœli, an inlet into life eternal. Bern.

Verſe 12. And to the Angel] See the Note on verſe 1. and on Chap. 1. 16.

Verſe 13. Even where Satans ſeat is] There was the Court of King Attalus (——diſcedat ab aulâ Qui velit eſſe pius; Flee thee away, O thou ſeer, for this is the Kings Court: Am. 7. 13.) & there was afterwards the ſeat of the Roman perſecuting Proconſuls, Qui ab aſcen- aſcenſore ſuo Satana perurgebantur, as Bernard hath it. Such a ſeat of Satan is both old and new Rome. At Conſtantinople (which was called new Rome) Arrius that arch-heretick, ſedens in latrina effudit inteſtina, voided his entrails at the ſtool, and left Mahometiſm there behind him as his excrement. Yet, as at Pergamus alſo God had a Church; ſo hath he ſtill even at Conſtantinople; the Patriarch whereof Cyril hath lately ſet forth a Confeſſion of the faith of thoſe Eaſtern Churches, agreeable in all points almoſt to the Proteſtant religion, but diametrally oppoſite to Popery.

Thou holdeſt faſt] As with tooth and nail, or by main ſtrength. κρατεῖς.

Who was ſlain] An honour not granted to the Angels of heaven, as Latimer was wont to ſay.

Verſe 14. I have a few things] More he might have had, but the Lord is not extream to mark what is amiſs in his weak, but willing people. The high places were not removed; nevertheleſs (thought that was his fault) the heart of Aſa was perfect all his days. 2 Chron. 15. 17.

And to commit fornication] Nothing hath ſo enriched hell (ſaith one) as fair faces. Theſe were thoſe Balaams-blocks, that Iſrael ſo ſtumbled at.

Verſe 15. The doctrine of the Nicolaitans] See the Note on Verſe 6. In the year 1067. The Popiſh Synod of Millain make laws againſt ſimony and the hereſie of the Nicolaitans: by which later they meant Prieſts-marriage. Brutum fulmen, novum crimen.

Verſe 16. Or elſe I will come unto thee] He was in the midſt of the ſeven Golden Candleſticks before. But when he comes to correct, he comes out of his place, Iſa. 26. 21. and it is a motion that he hath no ſuch minde to, Lam. 3, 33. it is to do his work, his ſtrange work, Iſa 28. 21.

With the ſword of my mouth] With fearful threatnings, terrible executions, Having vengeance in readineſs for the diſobedient, 1 Cor. 10. 6. Eliſha had his ſword as well as Jehu and Hazael theirs, 1 Kings 19. 17. See Hoſea 6. 5. Ierem 1. 10. Iſa. 11. 4.

Verſe 17. Of the hidden Manna] That is, of Chriſt, whom none of the Princes of this world knew: but God hath revealed him to his hidden ones by the Spirit, 1 Cor. 2. 8, 10. with Pſal. 83. 3. and given them to taſte of that heavenly gift.

A white ſtone] In token of abſolution. With this white ſtone may the Saints comfort themſelves againſt all the black coals wherewith the world ſeeks to beſmear them. If Libanius could ſay, Let Baſil praiſe me, and I ſhall ſing away all care, who ever reproacheth me; May not we much more ſay ſo of Chriſt? It he that juſtifieth us; who ſhall condemn us? Rom. 8. 34. Βασιλείῳ μὲ ἐπαινέσαντι, καὶ ἐγὼ τὰ τῆς νίκης ἔχω. In epiſt. ad Baſil.

A new name] Better then that of ſons and daughters, Iſa. 56. 5. The aſſurance whereof is (ſaith Father Latimer) the ſweet meats of the feaſt of a good conſcience, which is unconceivable and full of glory.

Verſe 18. Who hath his eyes, &c.] See the Note on Chap. 1. 14, 15.

Verſe 19. The laſt to be more] This is not every mans happineſs. See the Note on verſe 4. It is a diſputable queſtion (ſaith one) whether any Chriſtian (except he die ſoon after his converſion) do go on from ſtrength without ſome ſenſible decay of the inward power of that grace wherewith he is indued.

Verſe 20. Thou ſuffereſt that woman Jezabel] It is a fault then, not only to be active in evil, but to be paſſive of evil, Non faciendo malus, ſed patiendo fuit, ſaid the Poet concerning the Emperour Claudius. The Kings of the earth are taxed, Rev. & for not rooting out the Romiſh religion, and ſetting up the truth.

Verſe 21. And I gave her ſpace to repent] In ſpace comes grace, proves not always a true Proverb. They that defer the work, and ſay, that men may repent hereafter, ſay truly, but not ſafely. The branch that bears not timely fruit is cut off, John 15. 2. The ground that yields not a ſeaſonable and ſutable return, is nigh unto curſing, Hebrews 6. 8 The chick that comes not at the clucking of the hen, becomes a prey to the kite, &c.

Verſe 22. Behold I will caſt her into a bed] A bed of affliction for that bed of ſecurity upon which ſhe had ſtretcht her ſelf, Amos 6. 4. God hath his ſeaſon, his harveſt for judgement, Mat. 13, 30. Men may expect a time of healing when they ſhall finde nothing elſe but a time of trouble, Ier. 14. 19. One may defer a ſore till it be incurable. See Ezek. 24. 13.

Verſe 23 And I will kill her children with death] All men die (ſaith a Divine, deſcanting upon this text) but all are not killed with death. As a godly man ſaid, that he

he did ægrotare vitaliter, ſo godly men do mori vitaliter. He that can ſo die, is fit to die; and the contrary. O it is a woful thing to be killed with death.

Verſe 24. But unto you I ſay] Here Chriſt comes with his fan, ſhedding and ſhoaling out his own from others, that they might not be diſheartned, when worſe men were menaced.

The depths of Satan] That ſcience falſly ſo called, 1 Tim. 6. 20. Thoſe profound points, which the Impoſtours profeſſed and pretended to: as the Gnoſticks who would needs be held the only knowing men; the Illuminates, and other ſeducers, who had taken up a trick to qualifie their deviliſh doctrines with the name of depths or profundities. Depths or profundities. Depths they are granted to be, but depths of the devil: the whiſperings and hiſſing of that old ſerpent, not the inſpirations of Gods Spirit.

κρατήσατε. Verſe 25. Hold faſt] Hold by ſtrong hand, tugg for it, with thoſe that would take it from you.

Verſe 26. And keepeth my works] In oppoſition to Iezabels works, q. d. that keepeth himſelf unſpotted of the world, that foul luſk that lieth in that wicked one, 1 Joh. 5. 19.

Verſe 27. And he ſhall rule them] q. d. I will communicate my ſelf wholly to him. See Pſal. 139. 6, 7, 8 9. Mat. 19. 28. 1 Cor. 6. 2, 3.

Verſe 28. I will give him the morning ſtar] i. e. I will clear his wronged innocency, Pſal. 37. 6. and grant him a glorious reſurrection, Dan. 12. 3.

Verſe 29. He that hath an ear] See the Note on Verſe 7.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. I know thy work]

Bern. Sapiens nummularius Deus eſt; nummum fictum non recipiet. Though men may be deceived, God is not mocked. He knows that many cry, The temple of the Lord, that yet nothing care for the Lord of the temple. Ambroſe. Deifica profeſſio & diabolica actio. God likes not ſuch creaking and cracking.

And that thou haſt a name] Many content themſelves with a name of Chriſtians; as if many a ſhip hath not been called Safe-guard, or Godſpeed, which yet hath fallen into the hand of Pirats.

And art dead] All thy ſpecious works therefore are but dead works; thou canſt not ſerve the living God.

Verſe 2. Be watchful] Rouſe up thy ſelf, and wreſtle with God, ſhake thee out of ſin lethargy, as Sampſon went out and ſhook him, when the Philiſtims were upon him.

That are ready to die] Becauſe tainted with the infection of hypocriſie, that pernicious man-good.

Perfect before God] Gr. Full, without halting or halving. Tacitus Omnis Sarmatarum virtus extra ipſos. All the hypocrites goodneſs runs outward: it is ſhored up by popularity, or other baſe reſpects.

Verſe 3. And thou ſhalt not know] Calamity the more ſudden, the more terrible: for, 1. It amates and exanimates a man, as an unexpected ſtorm doth a Mariner, and as Satan intended Iobs meſſengers ſhould do him. 2. It can as little be prevented, as Eglon could prevent Ehuds deadly thruſt.

Verſe 4. Thou haſt a few names] Though no thank to the Paſtour, who was a mercenary eye-ſervant. Here the peoples praiſe is the Paſtours ſhame. Theſe good ſouls were but few; their names (as one ſaid of the good Emperours) might have been written within the compaſs of a ring. Iuvenal ſat. 13. Rari quippe boni; Diaconos pauciras honorabiles fecit, ſaith Hierom. Chriſts flock is little. Few received him in the fleſh. Iohn 1. 12. he wondered at one good Nathaniel. At his coming ſhall he find faith upon the earth? Yes ſure ſaith One; now he may find many faiths, ſuch as they be: ſo many men, ſo many faiths: but few that hold faith and a good conſcience together. 1 Tim. 1. 19. whereby they have put on Chriſt, Gal. 3. 27. Epheſ. 4. 24. Rev. 16. 15.

They ſhall walk with me in white] That is, they ſhall be glorified with perfect righteouſneſs, purity, clarity, dignity and feſtivity.

For they are worthy] In Chriſts account and acceptation. Like as thoſe were not worthy, that came not when called to the participation of his benefits, Mat. 22. 8.

They

They are worthy] non dignitate ſua, ſed dignatione divina. Or, They are worthy, not abſolutely, but in compariſon of thoſe before mentioned.

Verſe 5. Cloathed in white] See the Note on verſe 4.

The book of life] Wherein the juſt that live by faith are written.

But I will confeſs his name] His well-tried faith ſhall be found to praiſe, honour and glory, at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. 7. See the Note there.

Verſe 6. See the Note on Chap. 2. 7.

Verſe 7. That is holy] And therefore to be ſanctified in righteouſneſs, Iſa. 5. 16.

True] And therefore to be truſted.

That hath the key of David] And is therefore to be ſought unto for a door both of utterance and of entrance, Col. 4. 13. 2 Cor. 2. 12. Acts 16. 14.

Verſe 8. An open door] A fair opportunity of doing thy ſelf good: which thoſe that go about to deprive thee of, ſhall be ſure to loſe oleum & operam, their toil and tallow.

A little ſtrength] A little grace well-improved may do great matters, and ſet heaven open to a ſoul: The vine is the weakeſt of trees, but the moſt fruitful. Philadelphia with her little ſtrength is diſcommended for nothing; ſhe made all beſt uſe of it.

Verſe 9. I will make them] The converſion of the Jews ſhall be the wonder of the Gentiles.

Which ſay they are Jews, and are not] The perverſe Jews at this day pretend (but maliciouſly) that thoſe few Jews that turn Chriſtians, are not of them, but poor Chriſtians hired from other places to perſonate their part. Blunts voyage, p. 112.

That I have loved thee] The Church is the dearly beloved of God ſeul, Ier. 12. 7. or (as the Septuagint render is) his beloved ſoul. τὴν ψυχὴν τὴν ἠγαπημένην.

Verſe 10. The word of my patience] So called, 1. Becauſe we muſt ſuffer for the truth of it. 2. Becauſe hid in the heart, it worketh patience.

I will keep thee] From the hurt, if not from the ſmart of it; from the common diſtraction, if not from the common deſtruction.

Which ſhall come upon all the world] So the Romans, in their pride, called their Empire.

To try them that dwell] ſc. By that ſharp & ſore perſecution under Trajan the Emperor.

Verſe 11. That no man take thy crown] Not that crown of eternal life (for that is unloſable) but that honour that God hath put upon thee, verſe 9. A Chriſtian may, by falling into reproachful courſes, loſe what he hath wrought, 2 Iohn 8. 1. In reſpect of the praiſe of men. 2. In reſpect of inward comfort. 3. In reſpect of the degrees of glory in heaven; He may miſs of being a pillar in the temple of God, as ver. 12.

Verſe 12. Will I make a pillar] Pillars are both the firmament and ornament of Temples. Underſtand it of that fulneſs and conſtancy both of grace & of glory in heaven.

Which is new Jeruſalem] It was a pride in Montanus to over-ween his Pepuza and Tymium (two pelting Pariſhes in Phrygia) and to call them Hieruſalem, as if they had been the only Churches. And ſurely, it is nothing elſe but pride in the Browniſts to avow that their Churches are nothing leſs then the new Jeruſalem coming down from heaven: that the very crown, ſceptre and throne of Chriſts kingdom conſiſts in them. &c. Euſe. l. 5 c. 15. See M. Bayly his diſſwaſive p. 17.

My new name] viz. That which he received from his Father in his exaltation, Epheſ. 1. 20. Phil. 2. 9.

Verſe 14. And unto the Angel] Archippus, it may be; for he was a Paſtor here, and began to cool long before this, Col. 4. 17.

Theſe things ſaith the Amen] The God of Amen, as Iſaiah calleth him, faithful in performing his promiſes to the remnant that he reſerved in this lukewarm Church, among ſo careleſs a multitude. To theſe Chriſt became a beginning of the Creation of God; ſo the new birth is here called; as being of no leſs fame and wonder then the making of the world.

Verſe 15. That thou art neither cold] Such are our civil Juſticiaries, Politike profeſſors, neuter-paſſive Chriſtians; a fair day mends them not, and a foul day pairs them not, peremptory never to be more preciſe; reſolved to keep on the warm ſide of the hedge, to ſleep in a whole ſkin, ſuffer nothing, do nothing, that may interfere with their hopes, or prejudice their preferments.

I would thou were] Beter be a zealous Papiſt, then a lukewarm Proteſtant. A zealous Papiſt (ſaith one) dare tell us to our heads, that our religion is errour, our ſelves heretikes, our end deſtruction; that one heaven cannot hold us hereafter, one Church now; Campian. rat. 10. that our damnation is so clearly set down in our own bibles, that there needs no more to assure us thereof, then to open our eyes and read it; that if we be not damned, he will be damned for us, &c. This is better then forlorn wretchlesnes in right religion, and that detestable indifferency above specified.

Verse 16. I will spue thee out] I will please my self in thy just punishment. Ah (saith God, as one ridding his stomack) I will ease me of mine adversaries, I will avenge me of mine enemies, Isa. 1. 24. Now the basest places are good enough to cast up our gorge in. The hypocrites punishment must needs be heavy. Laodicea is commonly looked upon as a type of England. And surely that facies hypocritica of our Nation is facies Hippocratica, a mortal complexion, a sad Prognostick.

Verse 17. Because thou sayest] Si dixisti, satis est, periisti, saith Augustine. He that 2 Cor. 8. 2. thinks he knows any thing, knows nothing yet as he ought to know.

And knowest not] What ever thou deemest and dreamest of thy self, as setting up thy counter for a thousand pound, and working thy self into the fools paradise of a sublime dotage.

Hodæpor. Byz. l. 3. That thou art wretched and miserable, &c.] Semper inops, misera, infelix, rerum omnium egena, as Favolius saith of Athens, and her inhabitants at this day under the Turk.

Verse 18. I counsel thee] Having first convinced thee, verse 17. who before were uncounsellable. The Gibeonites sent not for Joshua till besieged. The Gileadites sought not after Iepthah till distressed: nor will men hearken after Christ, till driven out of themselves.

To buy of me] Buy the truth and sel it not. Make a thorow sale of sin and all (with the wise Merchant) to purchase Christ the pearl of price, for whom S. Paul (that great trader both by sea and land, 2 Cor. 11. 23, 25, 26.) counted all but dung and dogs-meat, Phil. 3. 7, 8. Diogenes taxed the folly of the men of his times (may not we the men of ours?) quòdres pretiosas minimo emerent, venderentq; vilissimas plurimo, that they undervalued the best things, but overvalued the worst.

Gold tried in the fire] Precious faith, 1 Pet. 1. 7.

White raiment] The righteousnesses of the Saints, that of justification, and the other of sanctification.

And that the shame of thy nakedness] But be covered as the Priests nakedness was by his linnen-breeches. Nature teacheth us to cover our nakedness: therefore when a man hath committed a sin, he blusheth; the blood as it were would cover the sin. Aaron by making the golden calf had made the people naked unto their shame among their enemies, Exod. 32. 5. Maximilian the Emperour when he yielded up the Ghost, gave charge that none should see his dead body naked. Erat enim omnium mortalium verecundissimus; saith mine Author. Buy we this white raiment of Christ: so shall our sins never shame us.

Eye-salve] That unction, 1 John 2. 20. Light and sight, the saving knowledge of heavenly mysteries.

Verse 19. As many as I love] q. d. Think not that I hate you, because I thus chide you. He that escapes reprehension may suspect his adoption. God had one Son without corruption, but none without correction. We must look through the anger of his correction, to the sweetness of his loving countenance: as by a rain-bow we see the beautiful image of the Suns light, in the midst of a dark, and watersh cloud. See more in my Treatise upon this verse, the second Edition.

And repent] So they did in likelihood; for Eusebius commends this Church as greatly flourishing in his time. Oh the divine Rhetorick and omnipotent efficacy of repentance, saith a Divine. This is the rainbow, which if God seeth shining in our hearts, he will never drown our souls.

Verse 20. Behold I stand] Christ stands, he doth not sit: now whiles a man is standing, he is going. Christ is but a while with men in the opportunities of grace: he will not always wait their leisure. The Church sought him (when once gone) with many a heavy heart, Cant. 3.

And knock] By the hammer of my Word, and hand of my Spirit.

And open the door, &c.] sc. By teachableness and obedience. This is not spoken of the first act of Conversion (quæ gratuita est & inopinata) but of the consequences of it; in which man, who being dead, hath been made alive, ought to cooperate with Gods grace.

Verſe 21. To ſit with me in my throne] The thrones of thoſe Eaſtern Kings were large and capacious, after the manner of a couch, ſet on high and covered with tapeſtry; ſo that beſides the Kings own room, others whom the King would honour, might ſit by him in the ſame throne. And hereunto our Saviour ſeemeth here to allude. This honour he promiſeth to him that overcometh; as Alexander the Great by his laſt Will left his Dominions τῷ κρατίστῳ, To the worthieſt of his Princes, to him that ſhould beſt deſerve it. Lud. de Dieu. in loc.

And he with me] Chriſt is no niggardly or beggarly gueſt. His reward is with him, he brings better commodities then Abrahams ſervant did, or the Queen of Sheba; gold, raiment, eye-ſalve, &c.

Even as I alſo] That is, Becauſe I alſo overcame, by vertue of my victory, ὡς for ὅτι. See the like John 17.2. Luke 4. 36. It is by Chriſt that we do over-overcome, Rom.8.37.

Chap. IV.

Verſe 1. A door was opened in heaven]

That is, Preparation was made for the manifeſtation of more heavenly myſteries.

Was as it were of a trumpet] To rouſe and raiſe up his attention. For it might fare with him, as with a drouſie perſon, who though awaked, and ſet to work, is ready to ſleep at it. Compare Zach 4.1.

Come up hither] Not by local motion, but by mental illumination.

I will ſhew thee] That thou maiſt ſhew the Church, that they have a moſt glorious and almighty Deliverer.

Verſe 2. I was in the ſpirit] See Chap. 1.10. That is, I was raviſhed into a ſpiritual extaſie.

And behold a throne] So Iſaiah was prepared for his propheſie by ſuch a ſight, chap. 6.1. And Ezekiel (beſides that ſtupendious viſion, *ch.*1.) heard behinde him a voice of great ruſhing, ſaying, Bleſſed be the glory of the Lord from his place, chap.2.12.

Sat on the throne] As Judge of heaven and earth, *Gen.*18.25.

Verſe 3. Like a Jaſper and a Sardine] God is here reſembled (ſaith one) by three precious ſtones, holding forth the three perſons in Trinity. A Jaſper having (as they ſay) a white circle round about it, repreſenting the eternity of the Father. A Sardine ſtone of a fleſhy colour repreſenting Jeſus Chriſt, who took our fleſh upon him. An Emrald being of a green colour, refreſhing the eyes of them that look upon it, repreſenting the Spirit, who is (as the rain-bow) a token of fair weather, and is a comfortable refreſher, whereſoever he cometh. Cottons 7. vial, p 5. out of Brightm.

And there was a rainbow] Which is, Signum gratiæ & fœderis, a ſign of grace and of the Covenant of mercy; which is always freſh and green about Chriſts Throne of grace.

Verſe 4. And round about] The Saints are round about God, *Pſal.*76.11. a people near unto him, *Pſal.*148 14.

Four and twenty elders] A full Senate, a ſtately Amphitheatre of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven, cloathed as Prieſts, crowned as Kings and Conquerors.

Verſe 5. Lightnings and thunderings] Is not deſtruction to the wicked? and a ſtrange puniſhment to perſecutors? Who ever hardened himſelf againſt Gods Church and proſpered? Have theſe workers of iniquity no knowledge, who eat up Gods people as they eat bread? *Pſal.*14.4. Surely, if they had but ſo much wit for themſelves, as Pilates wife had in a dream, they would take heed of having any thing to do with juſt men. If any man will hurt Gods Witneſſes, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies, *Rev.*11 5. It was therefore no ill counſel that a Martyr gave his perſecutor, If thou wilt not ſpare us, yet ſpare thy ſelf. It is a fearfull thing to fall into the puniſhing hands of the living God. Iob 31.3. Iob 9 4.

The ſeven ſpirits] See *chap.*1. *verſ.*4.

Verse 6. A sea of glass] The Word, say some, the World, others. The Word is to us a Chrystal glass, giving us a clear sight of God, and of our selves, 2 Cor. 3. 18. Jam. 1. 23. The world is to God a sea of glass, Corpus diaphanum, a clear transparent body; he sees through it.

Ζῶα. Four beasts] Or living wights; Not Angels, but Ministers, those earthly Angels, who are set forth, 1. Full of eyes for their perspicacity and vigilancy. 2. Furnished with six wings apiece for their pernicity and promptitude to scour about for the peoples benefit. 3. Qualified with all necessary endowments, for the discharge of their duties, being bold as Lions, painful as Oxen, prudent as men, delighted in high flying, as Eagles.

Verse 8. Full of eyes within] To look to themselves also as well as to the flock, Act. 20. 28 lest whiles they preach to others, &c. 1 Cor 9. 27.

They rest not] Gr. They have no rest, and yet they have no unrest neither; the sweet content they take in their continual employment, is fitter to be believed then possible to be discoursed.

In quibusdam exemplaribus. Holy, holy] This they double, treble and warble upon, nine times over.

Verse 9. And when those beasts] When the preachers are performing their Office, as Heralds of Gods praises.

Verse 10. The four and twenty Elders] The people yield their assent, and say Amen; the want whereof S. Paul accounts no small loss, 1 Cor. 14. 16.

And cast their crowns] Canutus King of England set his crown upon the Crucifix, and proclaimed, saying, Let all the inhabitants of the world know, that there is no mortal man worthy the name of a King, but he to whose beck heaven, earth and sea, by his laws eternal are obedient. When the great Turk cometh into his Temple, he lays by all his state, and hath none to attend him all the while. Solomons mother set the crown upon his head (so doth the Church upon Christs head) in the day of his espousals, Cant. 3. 11. Hen. Huntington.

Verse 11. Thou art worthy] If we would have our souls set as a pearl in that fair ring of heavenly Courtiers, that compass the Lambs throne, let us praise God, as they do.

For thou hast created] Our service must not be rash but reasonable, Rom. 12. 1. such as whereof we can render a reason. God hates a blinde sacrifice, a Samaritans service, when men worship they know not what, nor why. Joh 4.

And were created] Gods power put forth in the Creation and administration of the world is twice here mentioned; as that which can never be sufficiently admired and adored. See my Notes on Gen. 1.

CHAP. V.

Verse 1. In the right hand]

GR. On, or, At the right hand. There it lay ready, but none could make ought of it, till the Lamb took it, not only at, but out of the Fathers right hand, and opened it, ver. 7.

A book written] This book of the Revelation, which till the Son of man had received of his heavenly Father to shew unto his servants, neither they nor he (as Son of man) knew (so much at least) of that day and hour of his second coming.

And on the back-side] As wanting room within. Like that of the Poet, Scriptus & in tergo, necdum finitus Orestes. (Juven. Sat. 1.

Sealed with seven seals] To note the great secrecy, and gradual discovery of the Divine Counsels.

Verse 2. And I saw a strong Angel] Angels are very desirous to know the mysterie of Christ, 1 Pet 1. 11. and to profit daily in that knowledge, Eph. 3. 10.

Verse 3. Nor under the earth] That is, in the sea, as Exod. 20. 4.

Neither to look thereon] Or, therein, because sealed up.

Verse 4. And I wept] Out of a deep desire of knowing the Contents of this book. And as our Saviour going toward his cross, turned again to the weeping women, and comforted them, so he soon satisfied the desire of this his dejected Disciple. Tears are effectual Orators. Luther got much of his in-sight into Gods matters by this means. So did Melancthon when he wept on those words, Quos fugiamus habemus (Pontificios) quos quos sequamur non intelligimus. It is said of Sir Philip Sidney, that when he met with any thing that he well understood not, he would break out into tears. ——faciles motus mens generosa capit. The Spouse, seeking him whom her soul loved, had eyes like the pools of Heshbon glazed with tears. And Daniel had greatest revelations after three weeks of heavinesse, Chap. 10. 2. Cant. 7. 4.

Verse 5. And one of the Elders] A common Christian points the Divine to the Arch-propher, whom for present he thought not on. An eloquent Apollos may be better informed by a Tent-maker, and a great Apostle be comforted by an ordinary Roman. This Elder in the text seems to be the Patriarch Iacob (saith One) because from his prophecy the name of Lion is given to Christ. Gen. 49. 9. Act. 8. 26. Rom. 1. 12.

Behold the Lion of the Tribe of Iudah] So Moses sets forth our Saviour. And fitly, 1. For the excellency of his strength. 2. For his heroical spirit. 3. For his principality: the Lion is the king of beasts. 4. for his vigilancy; the Lion sleepeth with open eyes. Gen. 49. 9. Isa 11. 1. Gerh.

The root of David] So the Prophets. They have Moses and the Prophets, saith Abraham. To the Law, and to the Testimony. If any speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them, nor to be gotten from them. Luke 16. 29. Isa. 8. 20.

Hath prevailed] Gr. Hath overcome, or surpassed, &c. all creatures in worth, to do this great work. Ἐνίκησεν

Verse 6. In the midst of the Throne] As a fit Mediator betwixt God and men, even the man Christ Jesus, who gave a ransome, &c. 1 Tim. 2. 5, 6.

A Lamb as it had been slain] This form of speech is put (saith an Interpreter) to shew the continual recent vertue of Christs death eternally effectual before God, as whereby once for all he hath purchased eternal redemption. Some think that he still retains in heaven the prints and scars of those wounds that he received on earth in his hands, feet and side. His glorified body (saith one) is that golden censer, which through the wounds that are in it, as through chinks or holes, fumeth forth always a pleasant and sweet savour in the nostrils of his Father. It is also the Note of a learned Interpreter here, that the benefit of knowing the prophesies concerning the Church, Christ, before he was slain, had it not so as he had after his death. It was the purchase of the blood of Christ to have those things opened.

Having seven horns] Plenty of power. Antichrist hath but two horns, Chap. 13. 11.

And seven eyes] No want of wisdom, no need of a visible head to the Church or any other Vicar general to Christ, then the holy Ghost, called here The seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

Verse 7. And he came and took] As Mediatour he took it, as God he gave it. All things are delivered unto him of the Father; and no man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son revealeth him, Mat. 11. 27. See the Note there.

Verse 8. Fell down before the Lamb] As they had done before the throne, Chap. 4. See John 5. 23. Divine adoration is an honour due to the manhood of Christ also, as it is taken into union with the God-head.

Golden vials, &c.] Vessels narrow beneath, and wide upwards; so is the heart of a believer: narrow below, almost sharpened to a point, that it might touch the earth no more then needs must; and wide above, to receive the influence of heaven. Gold is pure and precious; so are the prayers of a pure heart.

Full of Odours] Therefore sweet to God, because Christ pours into them of his odours, Rev. 8. 3.

Which are the prayers of Saints] That is, their own prayers and praises, recorded vers. 9. And this is added as an exposition to, let us know what is meant by odours. See the like, Ioh. 2. 21. and 7. 39. Rev. 1. 20.

Verse 9. And they sung] A general joy in heaven and earth. Surely, it is a pleasant thing to see the light; how much more to see the light of the knowledge of God in the face of Jesus Christ? What a deal of triumph and exaltation is here all the Church over upon the opening of this book upon the receit of this Revelation? Should not this excite and kindle in our hearts a more earnest desire of understanding these mysteries? "Oh I could finde in my heart to fall afresh upon the study of the Revelation, "had I strength to do it, said my Reverend old Master unto me, a little afore his death; M. John Ballam I mean, Minister of the Word for many years at Evesham, where I heard him (in my childehood) preaching many a sweet Sermon upon the second and third Chapters of this book. 2 Cor. 4. 6.

A new song] For the new work of redemption besides that old song, Chap. 4. for that of creation.

Out of every kindred] Let this be noted against the doctrine of universal redemption that's now again so violently cryed up amongst us.

Verse 10. And we shall raign on the earth] Raign over our lusts; raign with and in Christ over all our enemies by a spiritual, not secular scepter; and at last judge the world, 1 Cor. 6. 2.

Verse 11. Round about the throne and the beasts] That is, round about the beasts and the Elders. Angels encamp about the Saints, as ministring spirits, and are glad of the office, that their God manifested in the flesh may be seen of them: and the multifarious wisdom of God in mans redemption be displayed unto them.

1 Tim. 3. 16. Ephes. 3. 10.

Verse 12. With a loud voice] Betokening their earnest affection; which also is here notably expressed by the many particulars they ascribe to Christ, as if they could never give enough to him. Now if Angels, who have nothing so much benefit by him, do thus magnify him, how much more should we? Our hearts should be enlarged, our mouthes opened, and we not a little vexed at our own vile dulness in being no more affected with these indelible ravishments.

Verse 13. And every creature] The whole creation groaneth under vanity, and rejoyceth as it were in the fore-thought of that liberty of the sons of God at the last day, whereof it shall partake, Rom. 8. 21. See the Note there.

Verse 14. And the four beasts] The Saints were the Precentors in this blessed Quire, and now they are the Succentors also. They began the Song, and so conclude it, as having far greater benefit by Christ then all other Creatures, and God expects a proportion, that our returns be somewhat answerable to our receits. The Saints upon earth sing a new (that is an excellent) Song in the honour of Christ, v. 9, 10. Heaven answers as by an Eccho; the Musick upon earth in the mean time continuing, v. 11, 12. (where note that this Song of Angels putteth Christ in the third person; he took not upon him the nature of Angels, he is neerer to us) all creatures come in as the Chorus, v. 13. and as Man began, so he ends the Anthem, v. 14.

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1 One of the seals]

That is, the first of the Seals, as Gen. 1. 4. Mar. 16. 2. Under these seven seals fals Rome Pagan (saith an Interpreter) as under the seven trumpets Rome Christian, under the seven vials Rome Antichristian. So all the Judgments in the Revelation are still upon Rome. Hence Mr. Dent cals his Exposition upon the Revelation, The ruine of Rome.

M. Cotton.

The noise of thunder] This beast was like a Lion, Chap. 4. 7. whose roaring is as thunder.

Verse 2. And behold a white horse] The Apostles and Apostolike Preachers of the Primitive times, white for their purity of doctrine, discipline and conversation; horses for their nimble and swift spreading the Gospel, which ran thorow the world like a Sunbeam (as Eusebius hath it) and was carried as on Eagles, or on Angels wings. A horse hath his name in Hebrew from devouring the ground by his swiftness, and was therefore by the Heathens dedicated to the Sun, whose going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it, Psal. 19. 6. Cranzius tells us, that the Saxon Princes before they became Christians, gave a black horse for their arms: but being once baptized, a white horse; with reference haply to this Text.

Ἀφ' ὁμοίως διὰ τῆς ἡλίου βολῆς. Euseb. hist. l. 2. cap. 3. Cranz. in Sax

He that sat on him] Christ, Chap. 19. 11. Psal. 45. 5. The conquerors entred into Rome, carried on a white horse.

Had a bowe] The doctrine of the Gospel, whereby the people fall under him, Psal 45. 4.

Adverſ. Iud. c. 7.

Conquering, and to conquer] Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca, Christo tamen patuerunt, saith Tertullian. Christ came and conquered this kingdom, which the Romans with all their power could not do. A Christo vinci, summa victoria est; vinciri, summa libertas, saith another. There is no such conquest as to be conquered by Christ; no such liberty as to be bound by him.

Verſe 3. Come and ſee] Johns better attention is called for. How dull and drouſie are the beſt in perceiving and receiving heavenly myſteries! A ſea-coal fire, if not ſtirred up, will die of it ſelf, ſo will our ſpark and ſpunk of light. Chriſt cals upon thoſe that had come far to hear him, ſaying, Let him that hath an ear hear, Mat. 13. See Zach. 4. 1.

Verſe 4. That was red] Portending troubles and tragedies, bloody wars and terrible perſecutions. Thoſe ten firſt were ſo cruel, that S. Hierom writes in one of his Epiſtles, that for every day in the year were murdered 5000. except the firſt day of January.

To him that ſat thereon] Chriſt, Mat. 10. 34. Zach. 1. 8. He ſtands over his Church as the Agonotheta. So he did at S. Stephens martyrdom, Acts 7. he moderates and overrules the enemies cruelty.

And that they ſhould kill one another] viz. The perſecutours ſhould riſe up and deſtroy one another, as the Romans did the Jews, and the Jews the Romans in divers provinces: And as the Emperours who got nothing (moſt of them) by their adoption or deſignation to the Empire, Niſi ut citius interficerentur, but to be cut off the ſooner. All or moſt of the perſecuting Cæſars died unnatural deaths. Tacit.

A great ſword] That of the Goſpel, Epheſ. 6. 17. which takes away peace, by accident, Mat. 24. 6. Chriſt threatneth the contempt of the Goſpel with wars and rumours of wars. Our late Edge-hill battle was fought in the vale of Red-horſe; as if God had meant to ſay, I have now ſent you the red horſe, to avenge the quarrel of the White.

Verſe 5. A black horſe] Famine diſcolours and denigrates, Lam. 4. 7, 8. It accompanies war for the moſt part, and in ſieges is very extreme, as at Samaria, where an aſſes head was worth four pounds: at Rome, where this proclamation was made in the market, Pone pretium humanæ carni: At Scodra, were horſes were dainty meat, yea they were glad to eat dogs, cats, rats, &c. At Antioch in Syria, where many Chriſtians (in the holy war, as they called it) were glad to eat the dead bodies of their late ſlain enemies. Turk. Hiſt. fol. 426. ibid. 18.

Had a pair of ballances] Gr. The beam of ſcales. To ſhew that bread ſhould be delivered out by meaſure, as is threatned, Ezekiel 4. 6. Deut. 26. and men ſhould be ſtinted and pittanced. ζυγὸν.

Verſe 6. In the midſt] The voice of the Lamb, Chap. 5. 6. Who appoints and orders all: he cuts us out our ſeveral conditions, cautioning for the wine and oil, when other food faileth.

A meaſure of Wheat] A quart, ſay ſome, a pottle others, an allowance for a day. Among the Greeks (ſaith Suidas) Chœnix dicitur dabatur. And that the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs (according to Rabanus) had each of them three Chœnices of Manna by the day, that was to be aſcribed to the divine bounty, as Ionius noteth. χοῖνιξ.

Verſe 7. See the Note on Ver. 3.

Verſe 8. A pale horſe] Fit for peſtilence, and pale death to ride on.

And hell followed ſc. To them that were killed with death, Revel. 2. 23. (See the Note there) that died in their ſins, which is far worſe then to die in a ditch.

Over the fourth part of the earth] That is, of the Roman Empire. This fell out in the days of Decius; Oroſius bearing witneſs, that the peſtilence which then raged did extend no further, Quam ad proſtigandas eccleſias edicta Decii concurrerunt, that is, then the proclamations of Decius came for the overthrow of the Churches.

And with death] i. e. The Peſtilence, that harbinger, and purveyour of death; This is ſomewhere called Gods evil Angel; and by Eccleſiaſtical writers Mortality. Hippocrates calleth it τὸ θεῖον, the divine ſtroke, becauſe God hath a ſpecial hand in it.

Verſe 9. Under the altar] i. e. Under Chriſt, Heb. 13. 10. under his cuſtody and ſafeguard, Or, Under the altar, that is, lying at the bottom of the altar, as beaſts newly ſlain for ſacrifice. See Phil. 2. 17. & 2 Tim. 4. 6. The ten perſecutions and (after them) the irruptions of the Goths, Vandals, Huns and Herula, heaped on Maſſacres of Martyrs.

Which they had] Gr. Which they had, and would not be drawn by any terrours or tortures to part with. They may take away my life (ſaid one) but not my faith; my head, but not my crown. εἶχον.

Verſe 10. And they cried] When God intends deliverance to his people, he poureth out upon them the ſpirit of grace and Supplication, Zach. 12. 9, 10.

Chap. VII.

Verse 1. And after these things]

This whole Chapter is purposely interlaced between the opening of the sixth and seventh seal, for the support of the poor suffering Saints, that they sink not under their many pressures.

Four Angels] Ministers of indignation, whether good or evil angels, the Doctors are divided.

Holding the four winds] Those besoms of the air, as Rupertus calls them, and Scripture-emblems of spiritual influence, *Joh.*3.8. *Cant.*4.uls. Ezek 37.9. The holding of the winds may peradventure intimare here that peace and ease in which God suffereth worldly men to live, and be overtaken, even upon the point of his great judgements. He made fair weather before Pharaoh till he had him in the heart of the Red-Sea. Mundi sco. a. Ru, ert. 1 Thes. 5 3.

Nor on any tree] The Philosopher compares men (the Scripture good men oft) to trees, which by benign winds are filled with fruits.

Verse 2. Another Angel] Whether Christ or Constantine acted by Christ, it much matters not.

Having the seal] Whereof Christ is the great Lord-keeper.

With a loud voice] Out of his great care of his elect. As Crœsus his dumb son burst out into loud speech to save his father. Ἀνοίγων καὶ κράζει ὁ Κροῖσος. Herod.

To the four Angels] Who are at Christs beck and check.

Verse 3. Hurt not] Reprobates oft fare the better for those few righteous that are amongst them; they are therefore singularly foolish for seeking to rid them, and root them out, as the Heathen Emperors did. These resemble the Stag in the Embleme, that fed upon the leaves which hid him from the Hunter; and Sampson like, by pulling down the pillars, they bring the house upon their own heads.

In their foreheads] Not in their hands only, as the vassals of Antichrist (*ch.*13.16.) who have free liberty to dissemble, deny their religion, do any thing, so the Catholick cause be thereby advanced. My son, give me thy heart, said Gregory the thirteenth to our English Papists, let who will have thy tongue and outward man.

Verse 4. An hundred fourty and four thousand] A competent company. Not so many as the locusts, *ch.*13. and yet more then most thought they had been.

Verse 5. Twelve thousand] Out of each Tribe so many; God enclines towards all the elect with an equal good-will; neither shall any one complain justly that others have been more regarded then he, as one well observeth here.

Verse 6 Of the tribe of Nephthali] Who is first reckoned among those by Rachels-side, because at Capernaum in this Tribe, Christ inhabited. Any relation to him enableth. Bethlehem though it be the least, is yet not the least among the Princes of Judah, for that out of her came the Governour of Israel, Mat.2.6. with *Mic.*5.6.

Verse 7. Of the tribe of Levi] Levi is taken in, Dan cut out of the roll for his shameful recidivation and revolt from the true Religion, *Judg.*18. This, Iacob foresaw and bewailed in that holy ejaculation on his death-bed, *Gen.*49.18. There is no reckoning made, or account given of this Tribe (as there is of the rest) 1 *Chron.*7. The fable of Antichrist to come of Dan, is so thin a device, that Bellarmine could not but see thorow it, and disclaim it. *Lib.*3. *de Pont. Ro. cap.*12.

Verse 8. Of Ioseph] That is of Ephraim, who, though Iosephs younger son, yet had the first birth-right. Ephraim is not named (though tacitely intended here) because joyned to Idols; let him alone therefore, saith God, *Hos.*4.17.

Verse 9. A great multitude] All the faithfull from the Apostles to the end of the world. In all ages there were some that sought righteousness: Neither was it ever so hard with the Church as the Host at Nola (in the story) made it; who when he was commanded by the Roman Cenſor to go and call the good men of the City to appear before him, went to the Church-yards, and there called at the graves of the dead, O ye good men of Nola come away, for the Roman Cenſor calls for your appearance; for he knew not where to call for a good man alive. In the very midſt of Popery there were many faithfull Witneſſes, and more of ſuch as (like thoſe two hundred that went out of Jeruſalem after Abſolom) went on in the ſimplitity of their hearts, and knew not any thing, 2 Sam. 15. 11.

Clothed with white Robes.] See the Note on ch. 3. 4.

And palms in their hands] In token of victory over all Spirituàl enemies. This was hinted at by thoſe Palms engraven in Solomons and Ezekiels Temple.

Verſe 10. Salvation to our God] Not to this, or that Popiſh Saint or Mediator; of all whom theſe Triumphers might ſay, as that Heathen once, Contemno minutos iſtos Deos, modo Iovem (Ieſum) propitium habeam, I care not for all thoſe ſmall gods, ſo I may have Jeſus on my ſide.

Verſe 11. And all the Angels] See the Note on ch. 5 ver. 11.

Verſe 12. Amen; Bleſſing and glory, &c.] The Angels aſſent to what the Saints had ſaid, and add much more, according to their greater meaſure of knowledge and love to God: Write we after this fairer copy.

Verſe 13. And one of the Elders] See the Note on chap. 5. v. 5.

Verſe 14. Which came out of great tribulation] It is but a delicacy that men dream of, to divide Chriſt and his Croſs. The Biſhop of London, when he had degraded Richard Bayfield Martyr, kneeling upon the higheſt ſtep of the Altar, he ſmote him ſo hard on the breſt with his Croſier-ſtaff, that he threw him down backward, and brake his head ſo that he ſwounded: And when he came to himſelf again, he thanked God that he was delivered from the malignant Church of Antichriſt, and that he was come into the true Church of Chriſt Militant, and I hope ſhall be anon with him in the Church Triumphant, &c.

And made them white] Other blood ſtains what is waſhed in it; this blood of the ſpotleſs Lamb, whitens and purifies.

Verſe 15. Therefore are they] Not for the whiteneſs of their Robes, but becauſe they are waſhed in the meritorious blood of the Lamb.

Before the throne of God] A good man is like a good Angel, always ſtanding before the face of God.

σκηνώσει. Shall dwell among them] Gr. Shall pitch his tent, or ſhall keep the feaſt of Tabernacles amongſt them, or ſhall hover and cover over them, as the cloud did over Iſrael in the wilderneſs; ſo that under his ſhadow, they ſhall ſafely and ſweetly repoſe themſelves.

Verſe 16. They ſhall hunger no more] They ſhall be as it were in heaven afore-hand, having, Malorum ademptionem, bonorum adeptionem, freedom from evil, and fruition of good, here in part, hereafter in all fulneſs.

Verſe 17. Shall feed them and lead them] An alluſion to Pſal. 23. 2. where David ſeems to reſemble powerfull and flouriſhing doctrine to green paſtures, and the ſecret and ſweet comforts of the Sacraments to the ſtill waters.

And God ſhall wipe away] A Metaphor from a Nurſe, which not only ſuckleth her dear childe crying for hunger, but alſo wipes off the tears.

Verse 1. The seventh seal]

THe buſineſs or parts whereof are the ſeven Trumpets, that ſound a dreadful alarm againſt the Roman Empire, ready now to be ruined for the innocent blood, and upon the inſtant ſuit of the Martyrs, Chap. 6. 10.

There was ſilence in heaven] That is in the Church on earth, often called The kingdom of heaven. This half-hours ſilence was either for horror and admiration, or for attent expectation, or (as ſome will have it) for religious awe and devotion: Chriſt the high-Prieſt, being now about to offer incenſe (thoſe prayers of the Martyrs, Chap. 6. 10.) there was in the Church (as uſed to be in the Temple at ſuch times, Luke 1. 10.) a deep ſilence. So among the Romans, the people in time of worſhip were enjoyned favere linguis, to ſpare their tongues. And in the Greek Church one ſtood up and cried, Σίγα λαὸς, σίγησον, λαὸς, peace people, leave off your diſcourſes. Among the Heathen Athenians in the time of divine Rites, the Prieſts craved ſilence of the people in theſe words, Εὐφημεῖτε, σίγα, φάος ἔστω λαοῖς. Be whiſt all ye people: Good words or nothing. Male ominati ſis parcite verbis. Archæol. Attic. 55. Horat.

Verſe 2. Which ſtood before God] In a waiting poſture, ready preſt to do his pleaſure.

Seven trumpets] To be ſounded at ſeveral times, to ſhew that God ſuffereth not his whole wrath to ariſe at once againſt his creatures, but piece-meal, and by degrees; proving if peradventure they will repent and recover out of the ſnare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.

Verſe 3. And another Angel] An Angel after another manner; not by nature, but by office. Chriſt the Angel of the Covenant. For I cannot be of his minde, who makes this Angel to be Conſtantine; the odours given him, to be the power of calling the Councel; the golden Altar, Chriſt in the midſt of this holy Aſſembly; the thick cloud of odours, the whole matter brought moſt happily to effect; which yet is a pious interpretation. M. Brightm.

Much incenſe] The merit of his own precious paſſion, Heb. 9. 24. & 13. 5.

Upon the golden Altar] viz. Himſelf, as Chap. 6. 9.

Verſe 4. The ſmoke of the incenſe] The Saints prayers perfumed with Chriſts odours, aſcended, that is, were highly accepted in heaven, Acts 10. 4. Exod. 30. 9. as well appeared by the anſwer they had here in the next verſe. The Church is ſaid To aſcend out of the wilderneſs of this world with pillars of ſmoke, Cant. 3. 6. Elationibus fumi, with raiſed affections, and with ſtrong ſupplications, wherein how many ſweet ſpices are burned together by the fire of faith, as humility, love, &c. All which would ſtink worſe in Gods noſtrils then the onions and garlick of Egypt, did not Chriſt perfume and preſent them.

Verſe 5. And filled it with the fire of the Altar] Fire, in token of fierce indignation, and from the Altar; for Chriſt came to ſend fire on the earth, Luke 12. 49. Fire and ſword, Act 12. 34. through mens ſingular corruption and obſtinacy, in not ſtooping to the ſcepter of this Kingdom. Hence fire and brim-ſtone, ſtorm and tempeſt, A fearful looking for of judgement and fiery indignation, which ſhall devour the adverſaries, Heb. 10 27. From the ſame Altar Chriſt, prayers go up, vengeance comes down.

Verſe 6. Prepared themſelves] Having got ſign, as it were, by that which Chriſt did in the former verſe, they ſet too in order to ſound their trumpets.

Verſe 7. Hail and fire mingled with blood] Inſtead of the fire of love (ſaith one) mixed with the ſweet rain of healthſome doctrine, and ſpirit of Chriſtian lenity, the fire of contention, and froſty hail-ſtones of deſtruction ruled all. Yea ſo far herein were the Biſhops carried one againſt another, as it is monſtrous what malice, falſhood and cruelty they practiſed, eſpecially in the times of Conſtans, Conſtantius, and Valens the Arrian Emperours. M. Forbes.

And the third part of trees] Men of mark.

And all green graſs] Meaner men.

Were burnt up Were tainted with errors and hereſies, whereof this age was ſo fertile and full (that as Hierom ſpeaketh) it was a witty thing to be a right believer.

Verſe 8. A great mountain] Some notable Hæreſiarch, poſſibly Pelagius, a Monk of Bangor, Morgan by name, that is, in the Welſh tongue, a ſea-man. This Morgan travelling beyond ſea to ſpread his hereſie, called himſelf Pelagius, by a Greek word of the ſame ſignification; becauſe it ſounded better in the ears of forraign Nations. Hence Auguſtine, Quid eo pelago (ſaith he) vult mergi Pelagius, unde per petram lib ratus eſt Petrus?

Lib. 1. de grat. Chriſt. adverſ. Pelag.

Verſe 9. And the third part] Hereſie as a gangrene ſpreads and kils; as the leproſie in the head, it renders a man utterly unclean, Levit. 13. 44. So cunning are ſome ſeducers, and ſo cloſe in the conveyance of their colluſion, that if poſſible the very elect may be deceived.

And the third part of the Ships were deſtroyed] That is, of the Churches, even thoſe that were planted by the Apoſtles themſelves, thoſe principal Pilots. Howbeit not all the Churches, but a third part onely: when the Church was in the wilderneſs, when Antichriſt moſt raigned and raged, God did preſerve ſome Ships, ſome fundamental doctrines, and the eſſence of baptiſm, and the eſſence of a true Miniſtery diſpencing them: and they, that is, her Paſtors, fed her there. Rev. 12. 6, 14.

Fluctuat, at nunquam mergitur illa ratis.

Verſe 10. There fell a great ſtar] Falling ſtars were never but meteors. That grand apoſtate of Rome may well be meant by this blazing, burning Comet. He was in falling by degrees from the time of Conſtantine till Phocas who ſet upon the chair of peſtilence.

Burning as it were a lamp] He ſeems to allude to that kind of Comet that is called Lampadias.

Mede.

The third part of the rivers] i. e. Corrupted true doctrine, and perverted the Scriptures with his falſe gloſſes.

Verſe 11. Was called Wormwood] Becauſe himſelf was in the gall of bitterneſs, and did imbitter others. See Jer. 23. 15. and Deut. 29. 18. with Junius his Note there.

Verſe 12. And the third part of the Sun] The Prelates and Patriarchs.

And the third part of the Moon] The inferiour Church-Officers.

And the third part of the ſtars] The community of Chriſtians. All began to be overſpread with groſs ignorance, not only of heavenly truths, but of humane ſciences, which are here called the night in compariſon of Goſpel-light. Gregory the great (thought to be that Angel mentioned in the next verſe) though better then any ſucceeded him in the Popedom, calling himſelf the ſervant of Gods ſervants, and carrying himſelf modeſtly in the days of Mauricius the Emperour: yet when Mauricius was ſlain by the traitour Phocas, how baſely did he claw the traitour, and collogue with him; commending to his care the Church of Rome, and often minding him of Peters primacy, and of that ſpeech of our Saviour, Thou art Peter, &c. for no other end, but that he might enlarge his juriſdiction over all Churches, by the favour of that parricide?

And the day ſhone not] It was a gloomy and diſmal day with the purer Church of Chriſt.

Verſe 13. And I beheld and heard an Angel] Or, an Eagle, as ſome copies read it. See the Note on Verſe 12. Gregory the great ſeems to be pointed at, who is ſaid to be the worſt of all the Popes that went before him, and the beſt of thoſe that came after him. Hence he is brought in flying betwixt heaven and earth. And that he cried with a loud voice: pointing at and painting out that to be Antichriſt that ſhould challenge to himſelf the title of Univerſal Biſhop, and had an hoſt of Prieſts ready to follow him, Hic propè eſt, & in foribus, ſaid he, and he ſaid right; for his immediate ſucceſſour, Boniface the third, fulfilled the ſame that he had foretold.

Chap. IX.

Verse 1 A ſtar fall from heaven]

GR. That had fallen from heaven, viz. when the third Angel ſounded, Chap. 8. 10. then the Biſhop of Rome began to fall; but here, in Boniface the third and his ſucceſſors, He is fallen, he is fallen from his primitive integrity into the deepeſt gulf of impiety. The Jeſuites (to blinde the matter) tell us, that by this ſtar is meant Luther whom Satan ſent out to diſturbe the Church, and God ſent them to withſtand him. Bugenbagius alſo, a Dutch divine, when he firſt read Luthers book of the Babyloniſh Captivity, raſhly pronounced him the moſt peſtilent Heretick that ever the Church was peſterd with. But a few days after having thorowly read and weighed the contents of that book, he recanted, and affirmed that all the world was deceived, and Luther only was in right: And ſo not only himſelf became a Lutheran, but many others alſo perſwaded by him. πεπτωκότα. Sculter. Annal.

The key of the bottomleſs pit] Whereinto he lets ſouls innumerable; ſo that in the days of Hildebrand letters were ſet forth as ſent from hell, wherein the devil and his Angels give the Popiſh Clergy many thanks for ſending them in ſo many ſouls as they never had in any age before. This key of the bottomleſs pit is (ſaith Whitaker) facultas exprimendi & docendi diabolicas doctrinas, his faculty of broaching and teaching doctrines of devils. Mat Pariſ. an. 1072.

Verſe 2. And there aroſe a ſmoke] Of heretical opinions and fagitious practices. All the old heretikes fled and hid themſelves in the Popiſh Clergy. Thoſe dark corners alſo of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty. Take heed (ſaid the Lord Chancellour of England) how you deal with Popiſh Prieſts: for (you may believe me) ſome of them be knaves all. Petrus de Aliaco long ſince wrote, Ad hunc ſtatum venit Romana Eccleſia, ut non eſſet digna regi niſi per reprobos. The Church of Rome hath for a long ſeaſon been ruled by a rabble of reprobates. Act. and Mon. fol. 1117. De reform. eccl.

The Sun and the air were darkned] That is, ſaith Carthuſian, the Prelates and the people.

Verſe 3. Locuſts upon the earth] So the Monks, Friers, Jeſuites, &c. are fitly called for their numeroſity and voracity. The Jeſuites have ſometimes maintained 200000 ſchollars. The Duke of Bavaria's houſe is ſo peſtered with them (ſaith one) that notwithſtanding his great revenues, he is very poor, as ſpending all his eſtate upon thoſe Popiſh fleſh-flies. Think the ſame of other Princes and places where they are received. Igna. Conclave.

As the ſcorpions of the earth] They are the foreſt ſoul-ſtinge (ſaith an Interpreter) that ever the world had. Pliny teſtifieth of the Scorpion, that there is not one minute wherein it doth not put forth a moſt venemous ſting to do miſchief. It creeps on crookedly, and ſo it ſtrikes the more at unawares. Its ſting is not ſo much felt at firſt, but ſoon proves uncurable. It is of a very angry nature (ſaith One interpreter) and there is a word in the Greek tongue taken from a Scorpion, ſignifying to exaſperate and to provoke like a Scorpion.

Verſe 4. And as it was commanded] As David charged his Captains to handle the young man Abſolom gently; ſo and much more ſollicitous is the Lord of his ſervants ſafety.

The graſs of the earth, nor any green thing] I ſay that under the Papacy was true Chriſtianity, ſaith Luther, yea the very kernel of Chriſtianity. Luth. contra Anabap.

Which have not the ſeal of God, &c.] Profeſſion, that outward mark of a Chriſtian: And of ſuch there were in the worſt of times, even in the darkeſt midnight of damned Popery, a conſiderable company. As at this day there are ſaid to be even in Italy 4000 profeſſed Proteſtants: As in Sivil it ſelf a chief City of Spain, there are thought to be no fewer then twenty thouſand Proteſtants. Spec. Europ.

Verſe 5. And to them it was given] This is oft repeated in this book: to ſhew that though Antichriſt and his actuaries bandy and bend all their forces to deſtroy ſouls, yet they are bounded by God, and can do no more then is given them from above.

Five moneths] Locusts use to live no longer. See Pliny l. 11. cap. 29. There are that interpret these five moneths of those 560. years, wherein the Pope stood in his full pride and power. For, ab eo tempore quo per vos Papa Antichristus esse cœpit (saith Bellarmine) non modò non crevit ejus imperium, sed semper magis ac magis decrevit. Since you first began to call the Pope Antichrist, he hath lost a great part of his command and commodity.

De pap. Rom. l. 3. c 21.

As the torment of a scorpion] Pliny testifieth that of all creeping things that are poisonful, the sting of a scorpion is most cruel and grievous.

Verse 6. Shall men seek death] Being brought through anguish of conscience, and fear of wrath, to that pitiful plight that Roger Bishop of Salisbury was, in King Stephens time, through long and strait imprisonment. He was so hardly bestead (saith the Historian) Ut vivere noluerit, mori nescierit, that live he would not, die he could not. Popish pardons, pilgrimages, dirges, &c. would not quiet or cure distempered consciences, or shake out the envenomed arrows of the Almighty, that stuck fast in them. A broken leg is not eased by a silken stocking. Nescio quomodo imbecillior est medicina quam morbus, said Tully of his philosophical consolations: so may these well say of their Popish paltry applications. The medicine is too weak for the malady. The Papists say, That the reformed Religion is a doctrine of desperation. This we are sure is true of theirs, as were easie to instance in Stephen Gardiner, D. Pendleton, Francis Spira, Guerlacus, Bomelius, Latomius, Crescentius, &c.

Heret latteri lethalis arundo.

Act. and Mon. 1904, 1907.

Verse 7. Like unto horses] Fed and fierce, to run and rush into the battle, as being driven by the devil. Si videris persecutorem tuum nimis sævientem, scito quia ab adversore suo dæmone percurgetur.

Bern.

Were as it were crowns] Triple crowns, miters, head-tires, shaven crowns; which last is a ceremony so bald, that some Priests in France are now ashamed of the mark, and few of them have it, that can handsomely avoid it.

Spec. Europ.

As the faces of men] But beware of men, Mat. 10. 17. See the Note there. Yea beware of those that are lookt upon as good men, who yet may act for Satan and not discern it, Mat. 16. 23. The temptation lyes in this, when Angels from heaven, men of singular parts and piety, preach other doctrines, Gal. 1. 8. 2 Cor. 11. 15.

Verse 8. As the hair of women] Insinuative, and inductive to sin.

As the teeth of Lions] Joel 1. 6. Catching and carrying to their dens all they can come by, as Tecelius did out of Germany, as Otto sent by Gregory 9. did out of England, where he left not so much money as he either carried with him, or sent to Rome before him.

Verse 9. And they had breast-plates] Their pretended donations, priviledges and exemptions from the secular power; shaking their tippets at Kings, whom they have trampled on, and forced to go barefoot on the hard stones, till they bled again. Thus dealt they by our Henry the second: yea they lashed him with rods upon the bare, and said, Domine, noli minari; nos enim nullas minas timemus, qui de tali curia sumus quæ consuevit imperare regibus & imperatoribus. Sir, never threaten us; for we care not for your threats, as being of that Court that commands Kings and Emperours.

Jac. Revius de vit. pontif. page 149.

And the sound of their wings] They are loud and bold-spoken, make a great noise, raise a great dust, and thereby think to carry it. Herein they are like the Heretick Nestorius, who is said to have been, Homo indoctus, superbus, contemptor Patrum, sed audax & magnæ loquentiæ, a proud Ass, but bold above measure, and of a loud language, whereby he so far prevailed for a time, that he seduced good Theodosius, and procured a writ for the banishment of Cyril that godly Orthodox Divine.

Zanch. Miscel. epist. dedic.

Verse 10. And they had tails] This may be well meant of their Surrogates, Officials, Chancellors, Registers, Apparitours, the fag end of their execrable train. See Isa. 9. 15.

Verse 11. And they had a King over them] Being herein wiser then those other locusts, Prov. 30. 27.

The Angel of the bottomless pit] That apostate star, ver. 1. the devils Lieutenant General, the Western Antichrist the Pope, not excluding the Turk that Antichrist of the East, that comes next to be spoken of. And indeed they may well go together: for they both set up another law then that of Christ, they kill the contrary part, they give liberty to the flesh, they will not have their religions to be disputed, &c.

Annot. ad loc.

Is Abaddon] A destroyer. I know not (saith learned Junius) whether the holy Ghost

Ghost in this name hath not some respect to the etymology or notation of Hildebrand, which signifies Fidei incendium, the fire-brand of the faith.

Verse 12. Two woes more hereafter] In respect of order; for in respect of time, the woes of the fifth and sixth trumpet are together, and do run parallel.

Verse 13. From the four horns] To shew, saith one, Christ his sufficiency of power to raise up instruments of his justice, according as by the sins of men he is provoked. To shew (saith another) that the prayers of the Saints from the four corners of the earth sound, and do great things in the world, make it ring.

Verse 14. Loose the four Angels] That is, those four potent peoples, the Arabians, the Saracens, the Tartars, and the Turks, that they may march out against Christendom, to murther and massacre the third part of men. These are called Angels, because sent of God to revenge the quarrel of his Covenant.

Verse 15. And the four Angels were loosed] As fierce and fell creatures out of a cave, now set upon spoil and rapine. They have a Proverb in the Eastern parts, Where the great Turk once setteth his foot, there never grows grass again; He blasts and desolates all.

For an hour and a day] At any time whensoever God shall command them out, and bid them fall on; they are at an hours warning, in arms at an instant. M. Brightman gathereth from this text, that the Turkish Empire shall determine about the year, 1696.

The third part of men] Mahomet the first was in his time the death of 800000 men. Selymus the second, in revenge of his loss received at the battle of Lepanto, would have put to death all the Christians in his dominions, who were in number infinite, &c. Turk. Hist. fol. 434. Ibid. 825.

Verse 16. Two hundred thousand thousand] Not so many at any one time, but in several ages and battles. Howbeit the Turk goes usually into the field 200000 strong: many times he hath more, as in that famous battle fought by Bajazet against Tamerlane, where he had well-nigh a thousand thousand. Of his common souldiers, called Asapi (which for the most part are miserable Christians) he makes no great reckoning or other use, then to blunt the swords of his enemies, or to abate their first fury: thereby to give the easier victory to his Janizaries, and better souldiers, which are all horse for most part. Turk. hist. 317.

Verse 17. Brest-plates of fire, &c.] Muskets, harquebuzes, pistols, and other spet-fires; but especially those great-guns, and murdering-pieces, so much used by the Turks, those mighty Ordnance they brought before Constantinople the Rhodes and other places; nothing inferiour to those two, that were cast by Alphonsus Duke of Ferrara, the one whereof he called the Earthquake, the other Grandiabolo, or the great devil. Chalcondylas. Peathams valley of vanity.

Verse 18. The third part of men killed] Not only of Christians, but also of their own; most of their poor being forced with victuals and other necessaries to follow their great armies in their long expeditions: of whom scarce one of ten do ever return home again, but there perish by the way; if not by the enemies sword, yet by the wants, intemperateness of the air, or immoderate pains-taking. Turk. hist. 1153.

By the brimstone] By the gun-powder, or by their sulphured bowstrings, which they discharge as out of their mouths, whereunto they draw or lay them.

Verse 19. In their mouths and in their tails] Like the Serpent Amphisbæna that hath a head (to do hurt) at both ends. Perhaps the Turks perfidy is here pointed at; they keep leagues no longer then standeth with their own profit. Plin. Turk. hist.

Verse 20. That they should not worship devils] As all idolaters do. The devil is φιλοχαιτης, saith Synesius, glad to be worshipped in an idol, as he was by Israel in a calf. And as he is still by the Papists, in their mawmets and monuments of idolatry. And whereas they say, they worship not the image (much less the devil) but God; they are like Clodia the strumpet, who to excuse her incest, said she did company with Metellus, as an husband; but with Clodius, as with a brother. 1 Cor. 10. 20.

Verse 21. Neither repented] Being stupified, as those Asses in Hetruria that feed upon hemlock. They that make them are like unto them. See Isa. 44. 17. Matthiol. in Dioscorid.

CHAP. X.

Verſe 1. Come down from heaven]

NOt from the bottomleſs pit, as Antichriſt that oppoſite to Chriſts unction and function. Chriſt cometh down from heaven, 1. By the aſſumption of our nature. 2 By the preaching of his word. 3. By puniſhing his enemies. 4. By relieving and delivering his people: and in this laſt ſenſe chiefly it is here to be underſtood.

Clothed with a cloud] Not yet ſo clearly to be ſeen and enjoyed by his, as when he ſhall come in the clouds.

A rain-bow upon his head] The effect of the Sun ſhining againſt a cloud, and is Nuncius fœderis & ſerenitatis, the Angel of Gods Covenant, and of fair weather.

His feet as pillars of fire] His meaneſt members ſtand out the hotteſt perſecutions. Or, he will burn up his enemies as chaff and ſtubble.

Verſe 2. A little book open] The bible tranſlated and explained. It is called a great roul, written with the pen of a man, that is, clearly, that the ſimpleſt of men may conceive it. But it is little in compariſon of the volumes of School-Doctors and Popiſh Decretals, wherewith the world wes peſtered, when the Bible lay locked up and obſcured. We may well ſay of it as S. Bartholomew (quoted by Dionyſius) ſaid of Divinity, καὶ πολὺν καὶ ἐλαχίστην, that in ſundry reſpects it is both a little and a great book. This Book Chriſt held open to his: though Antichriſt hid it and ſhut it up in an unknown tongue for a long while. He was to them as a little ſanctuary, Ezek. 11. 16.

Iſa. 8. 1. Deut. 30. 11.

He ſet his right foot upon the ſea] As Lord of ſea and land, maugre all hereticks and Antichriſts, that ſought to throw him out of poſſeſſion. Neither the beaſt that ariſeth out of the ſea, nor the other that ariſeth out of the earth, ſhall be able to do it.

Verſe 3. As when a Lion roareth] Gr. Loweth like an Ox, mugit for rugit. See here an Ox in a Lion, mildeneſs mixt with fierceneſs. Satis eſt proſtraſſe Leoni. This Lion preys not upon the proſtrate. Non mihi placet vindicta ſed victoria, ſaid Cæſar. So may Chriſt, I ſeek not revenge but victory.

Chap. 13. μυκᾶται.

Seven thunders uttered their voices] As the eccho of Chriſts loud voice. No ſooner had he ſpoken, but great was the company of preachers, ſons of thunder, who ſhould ſpeak powerfully, propheſie and cry down ſuperſtitious worſhips and heretical doctrines before peoples, Nations, tongues and Kings, verſe 11. of this Chapter. This was fulfilled in Wicliff, Huſs, Luther, Lambert, and other heroical Reformers, Conſer Amos 3. 7, 8.

Pſal. 68. 11.

Verſe 4. Had uttered their voices] Not audible only, but articulate: ſo as that John heard and was much affected. Neſcio quid divinum in auſcultatione eſt: there is no ſmall efficacy in a lively voice to work upon the heart. In Demoſthene aliquid deeſt Demoſthenis, quandò legitur non auditur.

Dieſtim. Val. Max.

Seal up theſe things] viz. Till the time appointed. See Dan. 8. 26. and 12. 9. Or, for that the things were the ſecrets of Gods kingdom, Mat. 13. not fit or poſſible to be revealed, 2 Cor. 12. 4.

Verſe 5. Lifted up his hand] And ſo ſwore ſolemnly, Gen. 14. 22. Numb. 14. 30. Ezek. 20. 5. Becauſe it ſeemed improbable (if not impoſſible) that ever Babylon ſhould down, Rome be ruined. But all the judgements in the Revelation (thoſe of the ſeven ſeals, ſeven trumpets and ſeven vials) are ſtill upon Rome Pagan, Chriſtian, and Antichriſtian. We may therefore conclude with that Emperor of Germany, Frederick 2.

Roma diu titubans, variis erroribus acta
Corruet, & mundi deſinet eſſe caput.
Rome tottering long, ſhall once be ſi altered,
And of the world ſhall ceaſe to be the head.

Verſe 6. That there ſhould be time no longer] i. e. The Beaſts time ſhall be no longer, but till the days of the ſeventh trumpet, which were ſhortly then approaching. Or there ſhall be now no longer delay or protraction of time.

Verſe 7. The myſteries of God] The converſion of the Iews called a myſterie, Rom. 11. 25. the bringing in of the Gentiles fulneſs, Epheſ. 3. 3, 4, 6. the kingdom of the Saints Saints of the moſt high, *Dan.*7. 18. then when all the kingdoms of the world ſhall become the kingdoms of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, *Chap.*11. 15.

Verſe 8. In the hand of the Angel which ſtandeth] This deſcription of Chriſt is here purpoſely repeated, that we may learn to truſt in his power, and fly to his wiſdom, as Agur did, *Prov.*30. 1, 2. for the underſtanding of divine myſteries.

Verſe 9. Give me the little book] Let Preachers ply the throne of grace, if ever they will preach to purpoſe. Bene oraſſe, eſt bene ſtudiſſe, ſaid Luther. Three things make a Preacher, Reading, Prayer, and Temptation. He that will underſtand Gods riddles muſt plough with his heifer the Spirit, which is not given but to them that ask it.

And eat it up] By reading and meditation: Miniſters muſt ſo devour and digeſt the holy Scriptures, that as good Scribes they may draw out new and old for the uſe of the Church upon all occaſions. Iacobus de Voragine was ſo called, Quod eſſet veluti vorago bibliorum, becauſe he as it were devoured the Bible. So Petrus Comeſtor for the ſame reaſon. Ioannes Gatius a Sicilian, was ſo well verſed in the Scriptures, and ſo great a Divine, that he once ſaid, Si libri ſacri perirent, ſe per Dei gratiam reſtituturum, That if the Bible were loſt out of the world, he could reſtore it. Some think that Ezra did ſo after the Babyloniſh captivity: but I cannot think ſo. Alſted. Chron. 450. Ibid. 267. Vide Pareum in Gen. prolog.

Verſe 10. Sweet as honey] The word is ſo to the ſpiritual palate; whereas to the carnal it reliſheth no better then the white of an egg, or a dry chip. Luther ſaid, He would not live in Paradiſe without the word; At cum verbo etiam in inferno facile eſt vivere, but with the word he could live even in hell it ſelf. See Pſal. 19. 10. & 119. 103. Ier. 15. 16. Tom. 4. Oper. la.

My belly was bitter] By reaſon of the trials and tribulations that uſually follow upon the faithful preaching of the Word. Oppoſition is Evangelii genius, ſaith Calvin. And, Prædicare eſt nihil aliud quam derivare in ſe furorem mundi, ſaith Luther. To preach is to get the ill will of the world.

Verſe 11. Thou muſt propheſie] For all the ſorrow, thou and thy ſucceſſours muſt ſet cloſe to the Lords work, for the regaining of thoſe peoples, nations, &c. whom Antichriſt hath enſlaved. Or thus; Thou muſt propheſie, that is, Before the time of fulfilling of all things, this Book of the Revelation ſhall be made as clear as if Iohn were come to propheſie again before men, and to give us a Revelation of his Revelation, according to Iſa. 30. 26. M. Burr. on Hoſea.

CHAP. XI.

Verſe 1. A reed]

THat is, The word of God, that little book that he had newly eaten. This is the only rule of faith and diſcipline, whereby all in the Church muſt be made and meted.

Like unto a rod] Or, Scepter. The word is that rod of Chriſts ſtrength, whereby he rules in the midſt of his enemies, Pſal. 110. 2. It is that right Scepter, Pſal. 45. 6. which he ſways, and whereby he ſoveraigns. The Proverbs of Solomon are called in Hebrew Miſhle, or Maſter-ſentences. And the Scriptures bear the title of Chieftains, Prov. 8. 6. and of Lords of collections, as ſome render it, Eccleſ. 12. 11. Prov. 1. 1. A Maſhal dominari.

Meaſure the temple of God] The Church that had been ſo wofully waſted and oppreſſed by Antichriſt, that it ſtood in need of new-meaſuring and repairing.

That worſhip therein] In the temple, as being all ſpiritual Prieſts, and in the altar; as placing all their confidence in Chriſts death alone.

Verſe 2. But the court] The Antichriſtian rout, caſt out as reprobate ſilver, as refuſe ſtuff, not worth the meaſuring.

Given unto the Gentiles] Antichriſt and his adherents. Papagans are no better then Pagans. Are ye not the children of the Æthiopians unto me, O children of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord? Amos 9 7.

The holy City] The true Church. See Daniel 7. 21. Epheſ. 2. 19.

Fourty and two moneths] This number is one and the ſame with 1260. days. The alluſion is unto Dan. 7. 25.

Verſe 3, And I will give unto my two, &c. ſc. Power to purge the Church, and to ſtand ſtand for the truth, all the while it was trodden under foot. Videſis Catalogum Teſtium veritatis ab Illyrico editum. Zuinglius recordeth, that Luther and he (both at one time, the one not knowing nor hearing of the other) began to write againſt the Popes indulgences. And of Luther and Melanchon one writes thus,

Diviſa his opera, ſed mens fuit unica; pavit
Ore Lutherus oves, flore Melanchthon apes.

Unto my two Witneſſes] The whole ſucceſſion of faithful Preachers, under the tyranny and rage of Antichriſt. Theſe are ſaid to be Two, that is, Few; or Two, that is enough, Deut. 17. 6. Or, Two, in reference to thoſe noble Two's, Moſes and Aaron, Eliſah and Eliſha, Zerubbabel and Jehiſhuah, in alluſion to whom theſe Witneſſes are here deſcribed.

Clothed in ſackcloth] As calling men to repentance: or as bewailing their blindeneſs; or as wanting better clothing.

Verſe 4. Theſe are the two Olive-trees] See Zach. 4. 3, 11, 14. In this book of the Revelation the holy Ghoſt borrows all the elegancies and flowers in the ſtory of the old Teſtament, thereby to ſet out the ſtory of the new in ſucceeding ages.

Verſe 5. Fire proceedeth out of their mouths] So that a man were better anger all the witches in the world, then Gods faithful Witneſſes; for they have ever vengeance in a readineſs for the diſobedient, 2 Cor. 10. 6. God inflicting what they either denounce or deſire of him, againſt their adverſaries.

Verſe 6. That it rain not] That the influence of divine grace be with-held from thoſe that deſpiſe the Goſpel; ſo that they become as thoſe mountains of Gilboah, 2 Sam. 1. 21. or that accurſed earth, Heb. 6. 8.

Verſe 7. And when they ſhall have finiſhed] Like as Chriſt, That faithful and true witneſs (as he is called, Rev. 3. 14.) when he had preached much about the ſame time as here, was ſlain by a Roman Governour, raiſed with an earthquake, and received up into heaven in a cloud; ſo theſe. And, Art thou not glad to fare as Phocion? ſaid he to one that was to ſuffer with him. Theſe two witneſſes could not be killed whiles they were doing; but when they had done their work. No malice of man can antedate my end a minute (ſaith one hereupon) whileſt my maſter hath work for me to do.

ἐκ ἀγαπᾷς κατὰ Φωκίωνα συναπο θανεῖν; Plut.

Shall overcome them] By arms, not by arguments.

And kill them] This killing whether it be already paſt, or yet to come, 'tis hard to ſay. But if to come, ſome think it ſhall be but a civil death, that is, of them as Witneſſes only, not a natural death as men: And ſo the ſame perſons ſhall riſe again, and enjoy the fruits of their former labours, and aſcend into a greater glory. M. Tho. Goodw.

Verſe 8. And their dead bodies] This ſhews it cannot be meant of a natural death; for how ſhould their bodies lie dead (in that ſenſe) for three years and an half; or, (ſay as it were) for a ſhorter time.

Of the great City] Rome, of whoſe greatneſs Lipſius and Stapleton have written. See Chap. 17, 18. & 18. 2, 6. Hence ſhe is called the great Whore, and great Babylon, not without reference unto the old Babylon; which was ſo great a City, that when it was taken by Cyrus, ſome part of it knew not what condition they were in, till three days after. Herodot. l. 1. Ariſt. Pol. l. 3.

Where alſo our Lord was crucified] For he was put to death by a Roman Judge, by Roman authority, by a kind of death proper to the Romans, &c. He is alſo crucified in Rome, in his members, word, ſpirit and worſhip.

Verſe 9. Three days and a half] i.e. For a ſhort time, till out of their aſhes others ſhould ariſe to ſtickle for Chriſt. The Pope never reſted, but had one or other faithful Witneſs to oppoſe him; either to his face, (as Joannes Sariſburienſis, Qui præſens præſentem Pontificem redarguit; and Mancinellus, who reproved Alexander the ſixth in a Sermon at Rome, and had therefore his hands cut off, and his tongue cut off, and his tongue cut out, whereof he died.) Or elſe in ſome more remote part of his dominion, as Savanerola (whom Guicciardin and Mirandula higly commend) Petrarch who writeth thus, Babylon altera, nempe propinquior, atque recentior, adhuc ſtat, vitò istidem cæſura, ſi eſſetis viri; Babylon would ſoon down, would you but play the men. Beſides a cloud of other Witneſſes, that might here be called in. Jac. Rev. p. 145. De remed. utr. fort. dial. 118.

Not

Not suffer their dead bodies] so fulfilling that, Psal. 79. 2. Some they would not suffer to be buried: others they digged up again after burial, as (besides many of our Martyrs they unburied and burned the bones of Hermannus Ferrariensis after they had Sainted him, because he was said to have followed the doctrine of the Waldenses, those ancient Protestants. Cardinal Pool had a purpose, if he had lived, to have taken up K. Henry the eights body, and to have burned it. 'Twas generally observed, that as Winchester and Bonner did always thirst after the blood of the living, so was Cardinal Pools lightening (for the most part) kindled against the dead: and he reserved this charge only to himself. Iac. Rev. p. 195. Act. and Mon. fol. 1905. Ibid 1439.

Verse 10. Shall rejoyce over them] As they did at the Council of Constance, when they had burnt John Huss and Hierom of Prague. So upon the news of the Bishop burnt at Oxford, Gardner came out rejoycing to the Duke of Norfolk; Now, said he, let us be merry and go to dinner. But it was the last he did eat, and he went hell to digest it too. So upon the news of the French Massacre, a Jubilee was proclaimed at Rome: the Cardinal of Lorrain gave a thousand crowns to the messenger. The Pope caused the Massacre to be painted in his Palace: those of Ireland he will surely pourtray in his Chappel or Oratory. Ibid. 1622. In terris mandarunt quod apud inferos degerunt. Ibid 1907. Thuan.

These two Prophets tormented them] As Elias did Ahab, Ieremy and Amos their flagitious countrey-men; and as the Martyrs here did their persecutors D. Fuller came to William Woolsey his prisoner, and said, Thou dost much trouble my conscience; wherefore I pray thee depart and rule thy tongue, so that I hear no more complaint of thee, and come to Church when thou wilt, &c. The end of carnal joy is sorrow (saith M. Bradford Martyr in a certain letter.) Now let the whoremonger joy with the drunkard, swearer, covetous, malicious, blinde buzzard S. John. For the Mass will not bite them, nor make them to blush as preaching will. Now may they do what they will; come devils to the Church, and go devils home: for no man must finde fault; and they are glad of this. Now have they their hearts desire, as the Sodomites had when Lot was gone, &c. Act. and Mon. fol. 1557. Ibid. 1475.

Verse 11. And they stood upon their feet] That is, they set themselves stoutly and vigorously to fight against Antichrist. As William Ockam, who being excommunicated by the Pope for writing some things against him, fled to Ludovicus the Emperor, who was likewise excommunicated, and said unto him, Defend thou me with arms, and I will defend thee with arguments. The Bishops also of those times that sided with the Emperour, though they were none of the best, yet they resolved and avowed never to yield to the Pope, Sed si excommunicaturus veniret, excommunicaturus abiret, cum aliter se habeat antiquorum canonum authoritas. Tu me gladio defende à Papæ injuriis, & ego te verbis ac scriptis defendam.

Verse 12. To heaven in a cloud] As Christ did. See the Note on Verse 7.

And their enemies beheld] Not without rage and regret to see how they were crossed, and the truth more and more propagated. Trucidabantur & multiplicabantur, saith one. The Church as the Lilly is increased by its own juice; Totum mundum sanguine, & oratione convertit, saith Luther. She converts all the world by her sufferings and supplications.

Verse 13. A great earth-quake] Since the Reformation, what stirs and broils have there been all over Christendome! Gods sword hath ridden circuit, Ezek. 14. 17. and is not yet sheathed, nor can it, Ier. 47. 6, 7. as being still in commission.

And the tenth part, &c.] Ruit alto à culmine Roma. Lewis the twelfth, King of France, threatned that he would destroy Rome, and coined money with an inscription to that purpose. George Fransperg (a General under Charls Burbon) that sacked the City of Rome, caused a halter to be carried near his colours, saying that with that he would hang the Pope: encouraging his soldiers (who were most of them Lutherans) with the great opportunity they had to get spoils. But the sins of that City are not yet full. Se terdituruum Babylonem cui cum hac inscriptione moneta, minatus est. River. Hist of the Councilot Trent 43.

Gave glory to the God of heaven] Confessed their sins, as Achan, and changed their minds, as those Mal. 3. 18. It is said of the Burgundians, that being afflicted and oppressed by the Huns, they applied themselves to Christ the God of the Christians, whom, after a long debate, they concluded to be the Almighty God. Alsted. Chron. 325.

Verse 14. The second woe is past] Visionally past, not eventually.

The third woe] Woe to the wicked, but joy to the Saints. At once the Sun rises upon Zoar, and the fire fals down upon Sodom. Abraham stands upon the hill, and sees the Cities burning.

Verſe 15. Great voices in heaven] i. e. Great joy and triumph in the Church militant.

Are become the Kingdoms] They have renounced Popery, given up their names to the Goſpel, and received the Reformation.

For ever and ever] Not for a thouſand years only, as the Millenaries hold.

Verſe 16. And the four and twenty Elders] See the Note on Chap. 4. 9.

Verſe 16. Becauſe thou haſt taken] Thou haſt ſlain and ſubdued thoſe thine enemies, that ſent meſſengers after thee, ſaying, We will not have this man to rule over us.

Verſe 18. Were angry] Sed vana ſine viribus ira; the wrath of theſe men turned to the glory of God.

That they ſhould be judged] According to their prayer, and thy promiſe. Chap. 6, 10, 11.

And ſhouldſt deſtroy them] God uſually retaliates and proportions jealouſie to jealouſie, provocation to provocation, Deut. 32. 21. frowardneſs to frowardneſs, Pſal. 18. 26. contrariety to contrariety, Lev. 26, 18. 21. deſtruction to deſtruction, as here. He pays them home in their own coyn.

Verſe 19. And the temple of God] Abundance of light ſhall be diffuſed in the Church, and heavenly myſteries more clearly revealed, and more commonly underſtood.

The Ark of his Teſtament] That is, the ſecret myſteries of God. The Ark was in a ſecret place; and ſeen by none but the High-prieſt once a year.

Joſh. 6. 16. And there were lightnings] Utter deſtruction to the wicked, as there was to Jericho, at the ſound of the ſeventh Trumpet.

CHAP. XII.

Verſe 1. And there appeared]

THis and the two next following Chapters are an Expoſition of the former viſion.

A great wonder] As ſhadowing out and ſhewing great wonders.

In heaven] That is, in the Church, or (according to ſome) in the viſible heaven, where Sun, Moon and Stars are.

A woman] Alma mater Eccleſia. The Church is called a woman, for her, 1. Weakneſs. 2. Fruitfulneſs. 3. Lovingneſs. 2 Sam. 1. 26.

Clothed with the Sun] With Chriſts own comlineſs, Ezek. 16. 14. She is alſo conſpicuous, Mat. 5. 14. and ſcorched with perſecution, Cant. 1. 6. All which notwithſtanding ſhe is comely. Uxor fulget radiis mariti, ſaith the Civilian.

And the Moon under her feet] She treads upon the worlds trash, bears patiently all changes and chances; and though the curs of the world bark at her, ſhe ſhines ſtill;

En peragit curſus ſurda Diana ſuos.

A crown of twelve ſtars] A crown in token of victory.

And of twelve ſtars] Thoſe white horſes, chap. 6. 2. the twelve Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, in and by whom myſtical Chriſt goeth forth conquering and to conquer.

Bodin. Theatr. Nat. pag. 350. Verſe 2. And ſhe being with childe] And ſo ſoon I melt out by the bears of the world. Urſa pragnantem mulierem non ſolum uteri gravitate notavit, ſed eam etiam quæ pridiè conceperit, ſolam ex omni turba conſectatur.

Cried travelling] Being hard beſet with cruel perſecutors, ſhe longs to be delivered of a Chriſtian Emperor, that might put her out of her pain and miſery.

She cryed] viz. In her prayers to God and Apologies to men.

Verſe 3. Another wonder in heaven] That is, in the Church which is called heaven; for 1. Its original is from heaven, John 1. 13. 2. Its tendence to heaven. Heb. 11. 14. 3. Its converſation in heaven, Phil. 3. 20. 4. Its dependence upon heaven, James 1. 17.

M. Arrowſmith. Δεράκων παρὰ τὸ δέρκεσθαι. παρὰ τὸ δέρειν ἀχθ. Scalig. A great red Dragon] A Dragon the Devil is called for his ſharp-ſightedneſs (the Dragon hath a very quick eye, and is ſaid to ſleep with open eyes) as alſo for his miſchievouſneſs to mankinde; and laſtly for his ſerpentine ſubtilty, Gen. 3. The comfort is, That as the devil is a Lion, ſo is Chriſt; there's courage for courage. And as the devil is a ſerpent, ſo Chriſt compares himſelf to the brazen ſerpent; there's wiſdom for wisdom. A great Dragon the devil is, as being God of the world; and red all over with the blood of souls, which he hath swallowed down, as S. Peter hath it, 1. ep. 5. 8. It noteth him also to be a fiery dragon, fiery red, full of wrath and rancour.

Seven heads] To plot, and ten horns to push men into the pit of hell.

Seven crown upon his heads] Pretended authority for what he did against the Church. It passed in France in manner of a proverb, That the modern Council (of Trent) had more authority then that of the Apostles, because their own pleasure was a sufficient ground for the decrees, without admitting the holy Ghost. That Popish Council was carried with such infinite guile and craft, that the Papists themselves will even smile in the triumphs of their own wits (when they hear it but mentioned) as at a master-stratagem. By these seven crowns, some understand the Supremacy of the Roman Empire, prevailing against the Church. Hist of the Coun. of Trent fol. 810.

Verse 4. And his tail drew] A monstrous tail for length and strength. One interprets it of his dog-like flattering tail, whence the proverb grew, Canda blandiri. Julian the apostate drew many from the faith by flatteries and fair promises. Luther was offered a Cardinalship to be quiet. The Pope offered Q. Elizabeth to confirm the English Liturgy by his authority, granting also the use of the Sacraments under both kinds, so that she would joyn her self to the Roman Church. And how the Pope clawed our King when he was in Spain, an. 1623. is better known, then that I need here to relate. Eras. Chil. κερκῳ σαίνειν. B. Carletons thankf. remem. p. 11. Iac Revius vit. Pontif.

And the dragon stood before the woman] This implieth, 1. His readiness and nearness. 2. His instance and diligence.

For to devour her child] As that Dragon Pharoah (so he is called. Isa. 51. 9.) sought to make away the new born babes of Israel, Exod. 1. Thus the Dragon Maximinus devoured Alexander the son of Mammaea: and thus Decius devoured the two Philips, because they seemed somewhat to favour the Christians. Thus Philip King of Spain suffered his eldest Son Charls to be murdered by the cruel inquisition, because he was any whit inclinable to the reformed Religion. Constantine the great had like to have lost his life for the like cause, but that God strangely preserved him for a better purpose.

Verse 5. And she brought forth a man-child] Constantine, the Christian Churches first and chief Champion.

Who was to rule all Nations] The whole Roman Empire, but especially to overrule and subdue the Churches many and mighty enemies. as Constantine did most notably.

Caught up to God and to his throne] To rule in the Church next under God himself. And to this height of honour he was caught, when the Empire was cast upon him, not once thinking of it. Bonus Deus Constantinum magnum tantis terrenis implevit muneribus, ante a optare nullus auderet, saith Augustine. De civ. Dei, l. 5. cap. 25.

Verse 6. And the woman fled] viz. After the battle mentioned in the next verse was fought and finished. See Verse 13. 14.

Into the wilderness] This notes her afflicted and desolate condition, forced now to uxibus live in poverty and exile.

Where she hath a place] To wit, that Temple that was so exactly measured, Chap. 11, 1, 2. called here a wilderness, as was that of Judea, Mat. 3. because but thinly inhabited. The elect are but a handful to a houseful of Atheists and Papists. Or else in allusion to the wilderness of Arabia; through which the Israelites fled from that Dragon Pharaoh.

That they should feed her there] Those two Prophets, Chap. 11. were appointed to feed these hidden ones, Psalm 83. 3. with the hidden Manna, Revel. 2. Their time and hers agree.

Verse 7. And there was war] viz. Whilest the woman was bringing forth; and after that her son was advanced to the Empire.

Michael and his Angels] Constantine and his Armies.

Against the Dragon] Maximinus, Maxentius, Licinius, and other tyrants, acted and agitated by the devil.

Verse 8. And prevailed not] They were so totally routed and ruined, that they could never rally or rage any more. Incundum Christiano homini spectaculum est, quasi coram cernere certantem Christum cum Antichristo, saith one, concerning Schlet. Annal. to. 1. p. 118.

Luthers Reformation. It was a pleasant sight to see Christ and Antichrist striving for the better. For whatsoever the Pope with his Buls, or the Emperour with his light-bolts did to hinder it, still the Gospel ran and was glorified: And as then, so ever since, maugre the malice of Rome and of hell. Their late utmost endeavours, and some successes for a season, were but as the last spruntings, or bitter bites of dying beasts.

Verse 9. Was cast out] Full sore against his will. If the enemies had but as much power as malice, the Church should never rest. But they shall be utterly routed and outed: as at this day they are here to our great comfort.

That old Serpent] When he was young, he outwitted our first parents, 2 Cor. 11. 3. then when their reason was not depraved. Now that he is old, and we but children, Eph. 4. 14. had we not need look to him, and not be ignorant of his wiles?

Which deceiveth the whole world] Having for that purpose his set and composed machinations, 2 Cor. 2. 11. his methods artificially moulded, Ephes. 6. 11. his depths, sleights, coggings of a die, &c. And herein he is unceasingly exercised, as the participle of the present tense noteth.

Verse 10. And I heard a loud voice] Great joy was throughout the Churches of Christ, as great cause there was, when Constantine came to the Empire. That was very remarkable, that Constantine being now a Conquerour, should cause a table to be hanged up on high before the doors of his palace, wherein was painted a Dragon that lay thrust thorow with a dart under his own and his subjects feet.

Euseb. in vita Constan.

For the accuser of our brethren] So the devil is called (saith one) in direct and full opposition to that special name and office of the holy Ghost. The comforter or pleader for us. The Russians are so malicious one towards another, that you shall have a man hide some of his own goods in the house of him whom he hateth, and then accuse him for the stealth of them; Just so deals the devil many times by Gods dearest servants. The word here rendred the Accuser, signifieth not any kind of Accuser (saith a learned Divine) but such an one as accuseth before a King.

Which accused them] And upon some such articles too as he is able to prove against them. Hence he is said to stand at Jehoshuah's right hand, at the upper hand, because his accusation was as true as vehement. But here's the comfort, Christ appears in heaven for his (as a Lawyer appears for his client) to nonsuit all the devils accusations. The Spirit also (as an Advocate) makes request in our hearts to God for us, and helpeth us to make apologies for our selves, 2 Cor. 7. 11. But may not the Saints say to Satan (first drawing them to sin, and then accusing them) as he did to Joab, 2 Sam. 18. 12, 13?

Zach. 3. 3. Heb. 9.

Verse 11. By the blood of the lamb] By his merit and spirit, Christs blood (as Pliny saith of Polium) is a preservative against serpents.

Lib. 2. c. 20.

And they loved not their lives] When one said to a Certain Martyr, Take heed, tis an hard matter to burn; Indeed, said he, it is for him that hath his soul linked to his body, as a thiefs foot is in a pair of fetters. In the days of that bloody persecutour Diocletian, Certatim gloriosa in certamina ruebatur (saith Sulpitius) multoq; avidius tum martyria glorioſis mortibus quærebantur, quam nunc Episcopatus pravis ambitionibus appetuntur, &c. Those ancient Christians shewed as glorious power in the faith of Martyrdom, as in the faith of miracles; the valour of the Patients, and the savageness of the Persecutors striving together, till both exceeding nature and belief, bred wonder and astonishment in beholders and readers. One Martyr said, Can I dye but once for Christ? Another, had I as many lives as I have hairs upon mine head, they should all go. Hanc animam in flammis offero Christe tibi. said Hierom of Prague.

Act. and Mon.

Non majorium quam triumpho victimis quam cum decem annorum ſtrigibus vinci non potuimus. Sulp.

Verse 12. Rejoyce ye heavens] Ye that have your conversation in heaven, and shall shortly remove your tents thither.

Wo to the inhabiters of the earth] Earth-worms that load themselves with thick clay, and strive with the toads, who shall die with most earth in their mouths.

And of the sea] Seamen are, for most part, very profane and godless. See Jude 13. Isa. 57. 20. M. Brightman by these inhabitants of the sea understandeth the Clergy-men, as they call them, who set abroach gross, troubled, brackish, and sowrish doctrine, which doth rather bring barrenness of godliness to their hearers, and doth gnaw their entrals, then quench their thirst, or yield any other good fruit.

For the devil is come down] Indeed he was cast down; but that the devil dissembles, and makes, as if he came for his pleasure sake, and so makes the best of an ill matter.

Having

Having great wrath] Indignation, commotion of minde, perturbation of ſpirit, inflammation or heaving of the blood, by apprehenſion of an injury. Satans malevolence was a motive to his diligence. Natural motion is more ſwift and violent toward the end of it. Θυμὸν.

Becauſe he knoweth] By the ſigns of the laſt judgement which cannot be far off, and by conjectures, wherein he hath a ſingular ſagacity.

That he hath but a ſhort time] He therefore makes all haſte he can to out-work the children of light, in a quick diſpatch of deeds of darkneſs. Certain Hawks in colder countries are moſt eager and earneſt to take their prey, when the day-light there is of leaſt continuance.

Verſe 13. He perſecuted the woman] As the matter of his calamity. The devil infinitely hates Chriſt, and ſins that ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt every moment. His inſtruments alſo, carried with helliſh malice, ceaſe not to malign and moleſt the Church, to their own utter ruine: for Chriſt muſt raign when all's done.

Verſe 14. Two wings of a great Eagle] That is, ſufficient means of ſafety and protection from peril, Exod. 19. 4. By this great Eagle, ſome mighty perſonage ſeems to be deſigned, Ezek. 17. 3, 7. And this may very well be Conſtantine, whoſe peculiar ſirname was Great: but yet ſo (ſaith an Interpreter) as that the great honour and riches, wherewith, as with wings, he upon good intention endowed the Church, is an occaſion to make her flee to the wilderneſs, all true and ſincere Religion by degrees decaying in the viſible Church. M. Forbes.

Where ſhe is nouriſhed for a time] See the Note on chap. 8. verſ. 9.

A time, times, and a half time] That is, a year, two years, and half a year, even three years and a half, as chap. 11. 9.

Verſe 15. Caſt out of his mouth water] Thoſe barbarous Nations, Goths, Huns, Vandals, Lombards, others ſtirred up by the devil to over-run the Empire, and afflict the Church. Or elſe it may mean thoſe peſtilent and poyſonful hereſies, Arrianiſm, and the reſt, wherewith the Church was infeſted, according to that of Solomon, The mouth of the wicked belcheth out evil things, Prov. 14. 28.

Verſe 16. And the earth helped the woman] That is, the multitude of Chriſtians meeting in the general Councels, thoſe four firſt eſpecially, held at Nice againſt Arrius, at Conſtantinople againſt Macedonius and Eunomius, at Epheſus againſt Neſtorius, and at Chalcedon againſt Eutyches. Theſe helped the Church exceedingly againſt inundations of hereſies; and were therefore by Gregory the great received and embraced as the four Goſpels.

And the earth opened her mouth] An alluſion to Num. 16. 22. Look how the earth ſwallowed up thoſe malecontents, ſo did God root out pernicious hereſies with their authors and abettors, by the power of the Scripture, and the zeal of the Orthodox Doctours, ſo that they ſuddenly vaniſhed out of ſight, after a marvellous manner.

Verſe 17. Was wroth with the woman] Who yet had done him no wrong; but he and his are mad with malice (when their deſigns miſcarry eſpecially) and are ready to ſue the Church, as he in Tully did another, Quod totum telum corpore non recepiſſet, because he had not taken into his body the whole dagger wherewith he had ſtabbed him. Orat. pro C. Rab. Poſth.

To make war] That war which is mentioned, Chap. 13. 7.

With the remnant of her ſeed] As a little ſeed-corn is reſerved out of a great heap for ſtore, which is nothing to the whole crop; ſo is the ſmall number of true believers reſerved by grace, nothing to the whole field and crop of the world.

Which keep the Commandments] A juſt deſcription of a godly Chriſtian. Boni catholici ſunt qui & fidem integram ſequuntur & bonos mores. To be found in faith, and holy in life, this is the kernel of Chriſtianity. Aug.

CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. And I stood]

WHere I might best see the beast that came out of the sea.

I saw a beast] The Church, flying into the wilderness from the Dargon, fals upon this Beast, which is nothing better then the Dragon under a better shape. Sic aliud ex alio malum. This beast is that Antichrist of Rome.

Rise up] Not all at once, but by degrees.

Out of the sea] Out of the bottomless pit, Chap. 11. 7. 2 Thes. 2. 9.

Having seven heads] To plot.

And ten horns] To push. Craft and cruelty go always together in the Churches enemies. The Asp never wanders alone; and those birds of prey go not without their mates, Isa. 34. 16.

And upon his horns] The Kings that are the Popes vassals. See Rev. 17. 11. These are the props of his power.

The name of blasphemy] This is his true name; his pretensed name is mystery.

Verse 2. Like unto a Leopard] Which is the female among the panthers, the property whereof is, as Pliny telleth us, with her sweet smell to allure the beasts unto her, hiding her terrible head, till she hath them within her reach, and then teareth them in pieces. Just so dealeth Rome with her unhappy proselytes. The Papacy is an alluring, tempting, bewitching Religion. No sin past, but the Pope can pardon it; none to come, but he can dispense with it, Etiamsi per impossibile, matrem Dei quis vitiasset, said Tecelius.

As the feet of a Bear] Which stands firm on her hinder feet, and fights with her fore-feet; so doth the Papacy with its Canons, Decrees, traditions, &c.

As the mouth of a Lion] Wide, ravenous, roaring, and insatiable.

And the Dragon gave him his power] This bargain was offered to Christ, Mat. 4. but he would none of it. The bramble in Iothams parable thought it a goodly thing to raign; So did not the vine and fig-tree.

Verse 3. One of his heads as it were wounded] Either by the invasion of the Goths; or by that fatal schism in the Church of Rome, anno 1378, when there sat three Popes at one for fourty years together; or by the falling away of the Protestants from the Popedom, from the days of Wicliff, John Huss, the Waldenses, Luther, to this present. Bellarmine bewails the business, that ever since we began to count and call the Pope Antichrist, his kingdom hath greatly decreased. And Cotton the Jesuite confesses, that the authority of the Pope is incomparably less then it was; and that now the Christian Church is but administrative.

Lib 3. de Papa Rom. cap. 21.

And his deadly wound was healed] By that false prophet ver. 11. that is by the Sorbonists, Jesuites, Trent-fathers, and other Popish Chirugeons. The Iesuits give out, That the devil sent out Luther, and God raised up them to resist him; but great is the truth, and will prevail, when all falshood shall fall to the ground. It is but a palliate cure we here read of.

And all the world] sc. Of Roman-Catholikes.

Wondered] Or had wondered, till the beast was wounded.

Verse 4. And they worshipped] Admiration bred adoration. Idolatrous Papists are worshippers of the devil: whom though in word they defie, yet indeed they deifie.

Who is like unto the beast?] Papa potest omnia, quæ Christus potest, saith Hostiensis. The Pope can do whatsoever Christ can do; yea and more too, it should seem by these wise wonderers: for who is like unto the beast? say they. Papa est plus quam Deus, saith Francis Zabarel. The Pope is more then a God. And why? for of wrong he can make right, of vice vertue, of nothing something, saith Bellarmine. Mosconius cannot be content to derive Papa from Papa the Interjection of admiring, because he is stupor mundi, the worlds wonderment (that ye may know him to be the beast here mentioned) but he must stile him King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, having ruledom over all rational creatures, Dulia adorandus, &c.

tichriſt. Dan. 7. 25. What cracks the Pope makes of his illimited power and prerogatives, who knows not? What blaſphemies he belcheth out of the table of Chriſt, of eating his pork, Al deſpito di Dio, in deſpite of God; of ſuffering himſelf to be ſtiled the Lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world; as Pope Martin the fourth did, of drinking an health to the devil, as another of them did, who hath not heard? Baronius at the year 964. reckoning up certain of the Popes, calleth them monſters, an abomination of deſolation in Gods Temple, &c. Cardinal Benno ſaith of Pope Hildebrand, That he was a blaſphemer, a murderer, a whore maſter, a Necromancer, an heretick and all that is nought. The Church of Rome (ſaith another of their own Writers) hath deſerved now for a long time no better of God, then to be ruled by reprobates. Marcellus the ſecond, Pope of Rome, ſaid, That he could not ſee how any Pope could be ſaved. Iac. Revius, p. 275.

Fourty and two moneths] Here M. Brightman calculates and pitches the ruine of Antichriſt upon the year 1686. or thereabouts.

Verſe 6. In blaſphemy againſt God] As when Pope Leo the firſt, and (after him) Nicolas the third affirmed, that Peter their predeceſſor was taken into fellowſhip with the bleſſed Trinity, as one with them. See verſ. 5.

And his tabernacle] Chriſts humanity (John 1, 14. and 2. 19.) this he blaſphemeth, by tranſubſtantiating a cruſt into Chriſt. Or, the Church of Chriſt, which he counteth and calleth the Synagogue of Satan.

And them that dwelt in heaven] The glorified Saints, whom either he deſpiteth with obtruded honours, ſuch as they acknowledge not: or elſe barks and rails at unceſſantly as Arch devils, deteſtable hereticks, common peſts, &c. as Luther, Melanchthon, Calvin, whoſe very name he hath commanded to be razed out of all books, whereſoever any man meets with it. Ubicunque in venitur nomen Calvini, delea-tur. Ind. expur.

Verſe 7. To make war with the Saints] As he did with the Albigenſes, publiſhing his Croyſades againſt them, as if they had been Saracens, and deſtroying ten hundred thouſand of them in France only, if Perionius may be believed. Not to ſpeak of many the thouſands ſince ſlain in battle by the Popes Champions in Germany, France, Ireland, and now alſo in England; beſides thoſe many more that have died for Religion by the bloody Inquiſition, by the hands of the hangman, 3600 in the Low Countreys by the command of the Duke of Alva, 800 here in Qu. Maries days, &c. The Beaſt hath even made himſelf drunk with the blood of the Saints.

And to overcome them] So it ſeemed, but ſo it was not. See Rev. 12. 21. The Saints never more prevail and triumph, then when it ſeems otherwiſe. Of them the enemies may ſay, as the Perſians did once of the Athenians at the field of Marathon, Ἐάλλομεν, ἐ πίπτομεν, πεφόνευμεν, ἐ φθίνυμεν.

We fell them, yet they fall not; we thruſt them through,
They feel no miſchief, but are well enough. Stobæus.

Over all kinreds and tongues] Here the holy Ghoſt points to the Popiſh Catholicism. The Jeſuites will ſtill needſly have the Roman Church to be the Catholike Church, though ſo many kinreds, tongues and Nations have utterly diſclaimed it. Herein they are like that mad fellow Thraſilaus in Horace, who laid claim to all the ſhips that came into the harbour at Athens, though he had no right to the leaſt boat there.

Verſe 8. Whoſe names are not written] He then that lives and dies a Papiſt, cannot be ſaved.

Slain from the foundation] ſc. 1. In Gods purpoſe. 2. In his promiſe. 3. In the faith of his people. 4. In the ſacrifices. 5. In the Martyrs; the firſt that ever died, died for Religion. Chriſt undertook to pay our debt in the fulneſs of time: and hence we were enlarged. A man may let a priſoner looſe, upon a promiſe to pay the debt a year after.

Verſe 9. If any man have an ear] q. d. Let all that have ſouls to ſave, beware of this beaſt: for is it nothing to loſe an immortal ſoul? to purchaſe an ever-living death? Purus putus Papiſta non poteſt ſervari. Conſet Rev. 19. 21. Its confeſſed of all, that a learned Engliſh apoſtate Papiſt cannot be ſaved.

Verſe 10. He that leadeth into captivity] q. d. Be of good chear; Antichriſt ſhall one day meet with his match, drink as he brewed, be paid in his own coin, filled with his own ways, have blood again to drink, for he is worthy. See Iſa. 33. 1. and 2 Theſ. 1. 6.

Here is the patience] q. d. Here is matter for the trial, exercise and encrease of the Saints graces. Hard weather tries what health. The walnut-tree is most fruitful, when most beaten. Or, here is support for the Saints, and that which may well make them to hold out faith and patience.

Verse 11. And I beheld another beast] Another in shape, but the same in substance with the former. For here Antichrist appears not as an Emperour, but as an Impostor. That these two are both one, see Rev. 17. 11. & 19. 20.

Coming up out of the earth] Set up by earthly men and earthly means: of base beginning; Gigas quasi Γηγενὴς. Ego supernas, vos infernates estis, saith our Saviour to the Jews. I am from above, ye are from beneath; ye are earth-sprung, as so many mushroms. John 8. 23.

And he had two horns] Two horns in his mitre, two keys in his hand, two swords born before him, a two-fold pretended power, secular and sacred, as King and Priest, in the Lambs stead, whose Ape he is.

Spake as a dragon] That is, saith one, he used an absolute command over consciences, raised himself through devilish pride and execrable boasting, Rev. 18. 7. Or thus: Though he hath two horns like the Lamb, that is, professeth the meekness and innocency of Christ, yet he speaks like the Dragon, which is to be understood partly of his blasphemies, partly of his diabolical doctrines, partly of hellish courses thundred out against true professours, and partly of his great promises to those that adore him. Diodat. Downh. of Antich. l. 1. c. 4.

Verse 12. And he exerciseth] The power of speaking blasphemies, of waging wars, of ruling over kindreds, tongues and Nations, &c. notwithstanding his wounded head, which is after a sort cured by the sedulity and subtilty of the Iesuites, and other the Popes Emissaries. The first beast (saith an Interpreter) is the Kingdom of Rome under the Pontificality: the second beast is the Pontificality wonderfully quickning the wounded beast to that estate: both are one and the same, except in consideration, as I have said. Forbes.

Verse 13. And he doth great wonders] By his art of jugling; for true miracles he can do none, nor his master the Dragon to help him. Hence they are called lying wonders, 2 Thes. 2. 9, 10. sorceries, Rev. 18. 23 and impostures here, ver. 14.

So that he maketh fire] As another Elias. This the Pope doth daily by his excommunications, casting fire-brands, as it were from on high at those that slight him: and moreover he telleth us of some, that for withstanding his edicts, were thunder-struck to death. Aventin. Annal.

Verse 14. That they should make an image] An Emperour, saith Aretius, an image of him at least, chosen indeed by the seven Electours of Germany, but confirmed by the Pope; who therefore is said to give life to the image of the beast, whereby he both speaketh and acteth. ver. 15. For if the Pope confirm not the new elect, he is no Emperour.

Verse 15. Should be killed] What slaughters Charls the fifth made at Magdeburg, and elsewhere by the Popes appointment, and what bloody work hath been done in Germany now for this eight and twenty years, or thereabouts by the now Emperor and his Father, against the Protestant party, I need not here to relate.

Verse 16. All both small and great] Emperour and else. The Pope having by his nephew perswaded the King of Bohemia, Maximilian (afterwards Emperour) to be a good Catholike, with many promises of honours and profits, intimating the succession of the Empire, which else he should hardly obtain, was answered by the King, that he thanked his Holiness, but that his souls health was more dear to him then all the things in the world. Which answer they said in Rome was a Lutheran form of speech, and signified an alienation from that See; and they began to discourse what would happen after the old Emperours death. Hist. of the Coun. of Trent p. 418.

To receive a mark] The Popish Clergy say, that in their Ordination they receive an indeleble character. They may chuse whether they will have it in their foreheads (where it cannot be hid) or in their right hands, where they may either hide it, or shew it as they think good. See the Note on Rev. 7. 3. The mark common to all the Popish rabble, is, S. Peters Keys branching out it self in every Antichristian doctrine and idolatrous practice. I can never sufficiently admire (saith one) the speech of blessed Luther M. Heyricks Serm. p. 108.

Luther, who though he was very earneſt to have the Communion adminiſtred in both kinds, contrary to the Doctrine and cuſtom of Rome, yet he profeſſeth, If the Pope, as Pope, commanded him to receive in both kinds, he would but receive in one kinde. Its a general rule among the beſt, that what the Pope commands, as Pope, though it be good or indifferent, as to pray, read, lift up an eye, hand, to wear black or white, &c. it is a receiving of the mark of the Beaſt, &c. Mr. Heyric's Serm. p. 108.

Verſe 17. Might buy or ſell] As at Rome, oaths, laws, vows are ſoluble, and all things elſe are ſalcable, Romæ omnia venalia.

Vendit Alexander cruces, altaria, Chriſtum:
Vendere jure poteſt; emerat ille prius.
The Pope ſels croſſes, altars, Chriſt, and all:
Well he may ſell, for he bought them at the ſtall.

Alſo its well known, that the Pope ſtrictly forbids trade and traffique with all whom he hath excommunicated, as he did with the Albigenſes in the Lateran Council: And as he did with one Tooly in Q. Maries days; who being hanged for felony, and defying the Pope, was (after his death) ſuſpended and excommunicated, that no man ſhould eat or drink, buy or ſell with him, bid him good morrow, &c. Act. and Mon.

Or the name of the beaſt] To be called a Roman-Catholick, which is better eſteemed among Papiſts then the name of a Chriſtian. It is notoriouſly known (ſaith Dr. Fulk) that the moſt honorable name of Chriſtian is in Italy and at Rome a name of reproach; and uſually abuſed to ſignifie a fool or a dolt. Annot. in Acts 11. ſect. 4.

Or the number of his name] That keep ſomewhat more aloof, and yet privily comply with Papiſts, and drive the ſame deſign with them; though more ſlily and covertly, and to themſelves perhaps unperceivedly. What's the reaſon the Pope will not diſpenſe in Spain or Italy, if a Papiſt marry a Proteſtant, yet here he will: but becauſe ſuch Proteſtants receive the number of his name, and will ſoon be drawn to him?

Verſe 18. Here is wiſdom] That is, Work for wiſdom; as ver. 10. Here is the patience and faith of Saints.

It is the number of a man] Such as a man, by ſearch, may finde out, if he have his wits about him, as we ſay. Others ſenſe it thus; the whole number of the Beaſt, whatſoever is numbred to belong unto him, is but the number of a man; humane inventions and wil-wiſdom. Men will have it ſo, and this is the ſum of all Popiſh Religion. Or it is called the number of a man, becauſe men do number. The Philoſopher affirms that man is therefore the wiſeſt of creatures, becauſe he alone can number, Bruta non numerant. This is an eſſential difference. M. Cotton.

Six hundred threeſcore and ſix] Amongſt the many conjectures, that of λατεινος, ſeems to me moſt probable, as moſt ancient and authentick. The year of Romes ruin is by ſome held to be 1666. Tis plain, ſaith one, Satan ſhall be tied up 1000. years; 666. is the number of the beaſt; Antichriſt ſhall ſo long raign; theſe two together make the juſt number. Luther obſerveth, that about the year 666. the Pope aſſumed to be ανεπιδυτος uncontroulable. Others obſerve, that Phocas (that adulterous Aſſaſine) Boniface the purchaſer of Supremacy, and Mahomet the grand Impoſtor, brake forth together about the ſame time, to the great devaſtation and hazarding of all Chriſtendom. Bernardus aſſeverat Antichriſtum futurum meridianum dæmonem quia à meridie erit, & ibi ſedebit. In Cant. ſer. 33.

Verſe 1. A Lamb]

IN oppoſition to that counterfeit lamb, *Chap.*13.12. A Lion he can ſhew himſelf at pleaſure.

Stood] Ready preſt for action, as at the ſtoning of Stephen, or he ſtood centinel for ſuch as he here reſerved to himſelf under the raign and rage of Antichriſt.

An hundred fourty and four thouſand] The ſame that were ſealed, *chap.*7. all the holy Martyrs, Confeſſors, Believers.

Having his fathers name] His father and their father, his God and their God: this was written on their fore-heads, as Holineſs to the Lord was upon the high Prieſts. For the conſtancy of their confeſſion; they were not aſhamed of the Goſpel of Chriſt, Rom. 1.16. nor afraid with any amazement, 1 Pet.3.6.

Exod.28.38.

Verſe 2. As the voice of many waters] The word of God (called here a voice from heaven) hath (ſaith an Expoſitor) three degrees of operation in the hearts of men. 1. It works wondering (as the ſound of many waters) and acknowledging of a ſtrange force, and more then humane power, *Mar.*1.2,23. *Luk.*4.32. *Joh.*7.46. 2. It works not only wonder but fear, as thunder doth: thus it wrought in Felix, and may do in any reprobate. 3. It works in the elect, peace and joy; it makes muſick in the ſoul, far ſweeter then that of harpers, 1 *Pet.*1.8.

M. Forbes.

Verſe 3. A new ſong] See the Note on *chap.*5.9.

But the hundred, &c.] To whom alone it was given to underſtand the myſteries of Gods kingdom. Others could not skill of it.

From the earth] i.e. From the Antichriſtian rout and rabble. Theſe dunghill-cocks meddle not with that jewel, the joy of faith, but ſpeak evil of that they know not.

Verſe 4. Which were not defiled with women] Which have not moiled themſelves with fornication corporal or ſpiritual, as thoſe Iſraelites, Numb.24. by Balaams counſel; and as Papiſts at this day, ſeduced by thoſe effeminate locuſts, *chap.*9.8. As for their ſhavelings that plead this text to prove marriage a defilement, let them hear the Apoſtle, *Heb.*12.4. and another almoſt as ancient: Si quis coinquinationem vocet commixtionem legitimam, habet inhabitatorem draconem Apoſtatam. If any call lawfull Marriage a defilement, that man hath a devil dwelling in him.

Ignatius.

Theſe are they which follow the Lamb] As the Sea-mans needle doth the North-pole: or as the hop, in its growing, winding about the pole, follows the courſe of the Sun from Eaſt to Weſt, and can by no means be drawn to the contrary; chuſing rather to break then yield.

Theſe were redeemed] For royal uſe. See *verſ.*3.

Being the firſt-fruits] Separated and ſanctified unto him from the reſt of the world.

Verſe 5. And in their mouth] Children they are that will not lie, *Iſa.*63.8. neither is a deceitfull tongue found in their mouth, *Zeph.*3.13. They will rather die then lie. The officers of Merindol anſwered the Biſhop that moved them to abjure, that they marvelled much that he would go about to perſwade them to lye to God and the world: affirming that they puniſhed their children very ſharply, when they took them with a lye, even as if they had committed a robbery; for the devil is a lier, &c.

*Act. and Mon. fol.*866.

For they are without fault] 1. By Imputation. 2. By Inchoation.

Verſe 6. And I ſaw another angel] This is held to be John Wicliff, who wrote more then two hundred volumes againſt the Pope, and was a means of much good to many. The Lady Ann, wife to King Richard the ſecond, ſiſter to Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, by living here was made acquainted with the Goſpel; whence alſo many Bohemians coming hither, convey'd Wicliffs books into Bohemia, whereby a good foundation was laid for the following Reformation.

but alow rather, and as it were in the mid-heaven, because of the imperfection of his doctrine, when it was first divulged.

Having the everlasting Gospel] The ancient truth, no new Doctrine. A Gentleman being asked by a Papist, Where was your Religion before Luther? answered, In the Bible, where yours never was. It is called the eternal Gospel (saith Brightman), as if the Holy Ghost would on purpose meet with the offence of those times, when the truth (that was restored) should commonly be condemned of novelty.

Verse 7. Fear God] Let one fear drive out another (as one fire doth another) the fear of God, the fear of your fellow-creatures, who draw you to idolatry. For this it is, that the second Commandment is the first with punishment.

Give glory to him] By confessing your sins, and amending your ways. See Iosh. 7. 19. Jer. 13. 16.

For the hour of his judgement is come] The judgement that he will exercise upon Idolaters, and their Mawmets, as once in Egypt. See Ioh. 12. 31. Acts 17. 30, 31. Act. 14, 15.

And the fountains of waters] Quantum miraculi sit in admiranda illa fluminum perennitate, nemo, credo, philosophorum satis explicare hactenus potuit, saith one. Buchole.

Verse 8. And there followed another Angel] Martin Luther with his Book De captivitate Babylonia, which when Bugenhagius first read, he rashly censured for the most pestilent book that ever was written: But upon better deliberation, he retracted his former sentence, and became a means to convert many others.

Of the wine of the wrath] Of the intoxicating enraging wine, that sets men a madding after her:

Nam Venus in vinis, ignis in igne furit.

There is a story of Walter Mapes, sometimes Arch-deacon of Oxford, who relating the Popes gross simony, concludes his Narration thus, Sit tamen Domina materq, nostra Roma baculus in aqua fractus; & absit credere quæ vidimus. Rome had ravished this man out of his wits.

Verse 9. And the third Angel] Understand by this third Angel, all the Reformers and Preachers of the Gospel after Luther, to the end of the world.

If any man worship] See Mr. Perkins his Treatise. A Papist cannot go beyond a reprobate.

And receive his mark] He saith not this of those that have the name or the number of the Beast. For we doubt not but many were carried away by him, as those 200. were by Absolom in the simplicity of their hearts, 2 Sam 15 11. knowing nothing of his Treason.

Verse 10. Of the wine of the wrath of God] Wine for wine. God delights to retaliate and proportion; as he that said, Fumos vendidit, fumo pereat. He sold smoke, and by smoke let him perish. Impostura faciunt & patientur, as the Emperor said of them that sold glass for pearls. They cozened others, themselves shall be cozened much more.

Without mixture] viz. Of mercy, with which God usually moderateth the cup of believers afflictions. See Iam 2. 13. They only sip of the top of Gods cup, Illud tantùm quod suavius est & limpidius: Reprobates drink the dregs. They shall have an evil, an only evil without mixture of mercy, Ezek. 7 5. Judgement without mercy; darkness without light. Philosophers say that in this world Non dantur puræ tenebræ; there is no meer darkness: but reprobates, that here preferred darkness before light, shall be cast into utter darkness without the least glimpse of light. Non surget hic afflictio. God will make an utter end; Affliction shall not rise up the second time. The wicked shall be totally and finally consumed at once. Nahum. 1. 9.

In the presence of the holy Angels] Who shall be not spectators only, but executioners also, as once at Sodom.

In the presence of the Lamb] Notwithstanding their Agnus Dei's, and other superstitious trumperies.

Verse 11. And the smoke of their torment] Utinam de gehenna ubiq, dissereretur, saith Chrysostom. Would to God men would every where think and talk more of hell, and of that eternity of extremity that they shall never else be able to void or to abide. Surely one good means to escape hell, is to take a turn or two in hell, by our daily meditations.

Verse 12. Here is the patience] See chap. 13.10. The beast, being thus declared and declamed against, will rage above measure; hold out therefore faith and patience.

Verse 13. A voice from heaven] That voice of Christ, Joh. 5.24. & 8.51.

Write, Blessed are the dead] Though by the Pope accursed and pronounced damned Hereticks.

Which die in the Lord] Especially, if for the Lord; which is (said Father Latimer) the greatest promotion in the world, such as is not granted to any Angel in heaven.

From henceforth] As well as heretofore in those Primitive persecutions. Or, From henceforth, that is, presently from the very time of their death. This puts out the very fire of Purgatory; for if all believers die in Christ, and are blessed, and that presently, then none are to be purged.

ἀπαρτι, ἐ ve-ligio, amodò, ab ipso mortis tempore.

Rest from their labours] The sleep of these Labourers, oh how sweet is it! Quale sopor fessis in gramine——they get the goal, they enter the haven,

Italiam socii lato clamore salutant.

A Christian here is like quicksilver (which hath in it self a principle of motion, but not of rest) never quiet; but as the Ball upon the Racket, Ship upon the waves, &c. Death brings him to his rest, Isa. 57.2.

And their works follow them] They die not with them, as Hortensius his Orations did. Mors privare potest opibus, non operibus. Death may deprive a man of his wealth, but not of his works.

Verse 14. A sharp sickle] An instrument to cut dow corn, Deut. 16.9. and the bunches and branches of the grapes, Isa. 18.5. It betokens sharp and sudden vengeance. What more beautifull to behold then the field afore harvest, then the vineyard afore the vintage? &c. This is spoken for the consolation of the persecuted people of God.

Verse 15. Thrust in thy sickle] This is not a command, but a request of the faithfull, which is soon fulfilled. It is like that of the Church, Psalm 102. 3. Arise, O Lord, and have mercy upon Zion; for the time to favour her, yea the set time is come.

Verse 16. And he that sate on the cloud] That is Christ, who soon condiscendeth to the suits of his servants. Iste vir potuit quod voluit, said one concerning Luther. The death of Arrius was Precationis opus, non morbi, the fruit of prayer, rather then the effect his disease, saith another. He was brought to confusion by the prayers of Alexander, the good Bishop of Constantinople.

Verse 17. And another Angel] The community of faithfull Christians that combine against Antichrist, to pull him out of his throne, and cut his comb.

Mr Forbes. Verse 18. And another Angel] A type of true Pastors, saith an Interpreter: by whose plain and powerfull preaching the other are informed and stirred up to consecrate their hands to the Lord. Such an Angel was Zuinglius, who died in battel: such was Beza in that battel that was fought in campis Druidensibus: Such were the Augrognian Ministers, and such were sundry of our late Army preachers, M. Marshal, M. Ash, my dear brother M. Tho. Jackson now of Gloceſter, &c.

Which had power over fire] Not Christum & Evangelium flammeum prædicans, as a Popish varlet slandered Beza at the forementioned fight, but as pacifying the fire of contention amongst brethren, and setting them all together against the common enemy.

Thrust in thy sharp sickle] Fall on, quit you like men, be valiant for the Lord of Hosts: Cursed is he that doth the Lords work negligently. Cursed is he that withholdeth his sword from blood. Thus the faithfull Ministers strengthened the hands and hearts of the souldiers to battel, and made them stick close to their Colours and Commanders.

Are fully ripe] Ripe for vengeance, as the Amorites were, when they had filled the land from one end to another with their uncleanness, Ezra 9.11. About the year of grace, grace, 1414. Theodoricus Urias an Auguſtinian in Germany, complained, That the Church of Rome was then become, Ex aurea argenteam, ex argentea ferream, ex ferrea terream, ſupereſſe ut in ſtercus abiret; of gold ſilver, of ſilver iron, of iron earth, which would ſhortly turn to muck. Jac. Rev. p. 229.

Verſe 19. And the Angel thruſt in] Down go the Antichriſtians immediately, by the power and proweſs of the Chriſtian armies, thus edged and eneagered by their Preachers. This we have ſeen fulfilled in our late Wars to our great comfort, at Edge-hill and Naſeby-fight eſpecially.

Into the great Wine-preſs] Lacus iſte locus cædis. This wine-preſs is called Armageddon, chap. 16. 16.

Verſe 20. And the Wine-preſs was troden] viz. By Chriſt the King, with his heavenly horſe-men, chap. 19. 13, 14.

Without the City | i.e. Without the Church, haply in Judæa, whither the Pope being driven from Rome, ſhall flie and ſit, till Chriſt ſhall unroof him with the brightneſs of his coming, 2 Theſ. 2. 8.

Even unto the horſe-bridles] To confute the pride aud cruelty of thoſe bloody Papiſts that threatned to ride their horſes up to the Saddle-skirts in the blood of the Lutherans: ſo Farneſius, Minerius, Felix of Wartenburg, Sir Charls Ellerker, Charls the ninth of France, that cruel Queen, who when ſhe ſaw ſome of her Proteſtant Subjects lying dead, and ſtripped upon the earth, cried out, The goodlieſt Tapiſtry that ever ſhe beheld. Theſe and the like ſhall be one day glutted with blood, which they have ſo barbarouſly thirſted after. Satia te ſanguine, quem ſitiiſti, &c. as ſhe ſaid of Cyrus. Flac. Illyr. Act. and Mon. Juſtin. l. 1.

Chap. XV.

Verſe 1. And I ſaw another ſign]

Diſtinct from the former, and deſcribing the utter overthrow of Antichriſt in this and the following Chapters.

Great and marvellous] A juſt wonder it was indeed, the miracle that we in theſe laſt times are to look for, that the Kingdom of Antichriſt ſhould be ſo eaſily and ſuddenly over-turned by the preaching of the Goſpel, as once the walls of Jericho were by the blowing of Rams-horns.

Seven Angels] i.e. Certain Chieftains of the Reformed Churches.

Having the ſeven laſt plagues] Being the ſeveral parts of the ſeventh Trumpet, and ſaid to be the laſt that ſhall in this life be inflicted: though far worſe follow in hell, whereof all theſe are but typical. Here the leaves only (as it were) fall upon reprobates, but hereafter the whole trees. Here they pay but the Uſe-money only, but there the whole Principal.

Verſe 2. As it were a ſea of glaſs] The word of God mingled with the vertue of the holy Ghoſt, ſay ſome. The world full of affliction, ſay others.

Having the harps of God] Hearts full of heaven.

Verſe 3. And they ſing] There cannot but be muſick in the Temple of the holy Ghoſt.

The ſong of Moſes] As being delivered out of ſpiritual Ægypt.

And the ſong of the Lamb] That mentioned, ch. 14. 3. and the ſame in effect with that of Saint Paul, 1 Tim. 1, 15, 17.

Verſe 4. Who ſhall not fear thee] q.d. How mad are the enemies, how ſottiſh is the world that fear not thee who art the proper object of fear? Pſal. 76. 11. The Greeks call him Θεὸς, quaſi Δεὸς, fear: the Chaldee Deobilah for the ſame reaſon: and Jacob ſtiled him The fear of his father Iſaac.

For thou only art holy] Before it had been ſaid of his Holineſs, Who is like unto the beaſt? Now, Who ſhall not fear thee, O Lord, for thou only art holy?

For all Nations ſhall come] As being deeply affected with thine heavieſt plagues upon Antichriſt; they ſhall better bethink themſelves, They ſhall return and diſcern betwixt the righteous and the wicked, Mal. 3. ult.

Are

Are made manifest] i.e. Are begun to be, and more and more shall be, if our sins hinder not.

Verse 5. The temple of the tabernacle] These words are all one with those, ch. 11. 19. to the consideration whereof we are here recalled, after so long an interruption.

Verse 6. Clothed in pure] Habited as holy Priests.

With golden girdles] Here an Interpreter gives this note, That they which are lewd and vicious, though never so wise, politick, rich and valiant, shall not be Gods Instruments to plague Antichrist and his kingdom. This their priestly apparel sheweth also, how that these Angels come forth in the Churches cause, and for her sake, without any by and sinister respect. They are all of them sincere professors of the truth of Christ; their brests girded with the golden girdles of truth. M Bernard.

Verse 7. And one of the four beasts] The faithfull Pastors by their divine discourses of the pure worship of God, the intolerable tyranny of Antichrist, &c. stir up the spirits of Gods Servants to set themselves against that man of sin, and to execute upon him the judgement written. This honour have all his Saints, Psal. 149. ult.

Seven golden vials] Vessels of large content, but narrow mouths; they pour out slowly, but drench deeply, and distill effectually the wrath of God, which may be let out in minnums, and yet do great matters; as there may be much poison in little drops. These vials are said to be golden, to shew that this anger is holy.

Full of the wrath of God] Filled out of the cup of his wrath, mentioned in the former Chapter.

Verse 8. And the Temple was filled] This shews that God graciously approves and miracu'ously protects the reformed Churches. See Exod. 40. 34, 35. 1 King. 8. 10. So he did the Hussites in Bohemia. All Germany was up in arms against them. Actum jam de Hussitis videbatur. Verum Germani, nondum viso hoste. Panico terrore percussi, diffugerunt, saith the Historian. And when things seemed to be in a desperate condition, the Germans smitten with a Panick terrour, fled all away before they had looked the enemy in the face. How wonderfully is Geneva preserved in the midst of many mighty enemies? What should I speak of Rochel relieved, and Leiden rescued both from heaven? We of this Nation have lately seen as much of Gods glory and power in our Temple as ever did any.

Till the seven plagues] No Antichristian could understand the end of the seven plagues, till beaten into a better minde. Vexatio dat intellectum.

CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. Goe your ways]

A Proof of the divine calling of the Ministers of the Gospel. This commission came out of the Temple, as obtained by the prayers of the Saints.

Pour out the vials] See the Note on Chap. 15. 7.

Upon the earth] Upon Antichrist and his Adherents. Roma facta est ex aurea ferrea, ex ferrea terrea, said one of her own Favourites. It is said, Chap. 12. 16. that the earth helped the woman; and yet here that the vials of Gods wrath were poured out upon the earth; to teach us, saith One, that men may be useful for the Publick, and yet not freed from Gods wrath. But that by the By only.

Verse 2. And the first went] They went not all at once. Note the patience of God, waiting mens return unto him.

Upon the earth] Antichrists footstool, his branded slaves.

A noisom and grievous sore] The French disease, say some; the devils disease, say others, viz. Spite and envy at the Reformation wrought in Bohemia, Germany, England, &c. upon the discovery of the Papists hypocrisy and filthiness.

Ver. 3. Upon the Sea] The Popish Council (called a Sea. from the concourse thereunto from all parts) that of Trent especially, with their deadly Decrees, making the Traditions of the Church the rule of Faith, &c. And these deadly Decrees were written with the blood of Hereticks.

Died

Died in the ſea] As the fiſhes of Jordan do as ſoon as they fall into the Mare mortuum; and as the fiſhes in the river Nilus did, when the waters thereof were turned into blood.

Verſe 4. Upon the rivers, &c.] The perſecutors and impoſtors; the Jeſuits eſpecially, who have lately added twelve new Articles (by the authority of Pope Pius 4.) raiſed out of the Council of Trent, and added to the Nicen Creed, to be received with others, as the true Catholick faith; to be believed by as many as ſhall be ſaved. And thoſe that receive them not, are not ſuffered to live amongſt them. This is worſe then the ſix Articles in Henry the eighths time, that whip with ſix cords, as they call'd it. See theſe 12. Artic. in the epiſt. prefix. to B. Jewels works.

Verſe 5. The angel of the waters] The ſame that poured forth his vial upon the waters, ver. 4.

Thou art righteous] Gods judgements are ſometimes ſecret, always juſt, and ſo to be acknowledged. We ſhall one day ſee the reaſon of all, and ſay as Iehu did, 2 Kin. 9. 36. Iuſtin. l. 1. Val. Max. Act. and Mon. Camden.

Verſe 6. For they have ſhed] As Minerius that monſter, the cruel Duke of Alva, bloody Bonner, the Guiſes, and other of the Popes Champions. Duke d' Alva boaſted of it, that he had put 36000. Proteſtants to death; but they were reſcued by the goodneſs of God, and by the proweſs of Q. Elizabeth; and now they are got from under the altar, as verſ. 7. See the Mirror or Looking-glaſs both for Saints and ſinners, ſet forth by my moſt loving and highly honoured friend M. Am. Clark, Paſtor and Preacher of the Word at Bennet Fink, London; unto whom not only I give thanks for his help in this publication, but alſo all the Churches, that ſhall get good thereby.

Thou haſt given them blood to drink] As Tomyris dealt by Cyrus, the Parthians by Craſſus, the Romans by thoſe Iews that cried out, His blood be upon us, &c. as our laws do by the Prieſts and Jeſuits, and thoſe that receive them, proceeding againſt ſuch as Traitors to the State. The putting out of the French Kings eyes, who promiſed before with his eyes to ſee one of Gods true ſervants burned: The death of Charls the 9. of France, author of the Pariſian maſſacre, by exceeding bleeding at ſundry parts of his body, who ſeeth not to be the juſt hand of God upon them? This Charls beholding the bloody bodies of the butchered Proteſtants, in that execrable maſſacre, and feeding his eye upon that woful ſpectacle, breathed out this bloody ſpeech, Quam bonus eſt odor hoſtis mortui! How ſweet is the ſmell of a ſlain enemy? and ſhortly after breathed out his accurſed ſoul, Inter horribiliuum blaſphemiarum diras, ſaith the Hiſtorian, tantàm ſanguinis vim projiciens, &c. after that Beza had fore-warned him (but in vain) by that verſe, Tu vero Herodes ſanguinolente time.

So Iulian, Attila, Felix of Wartenburg, Henry 3. of France, ſtabbed in the ſame chamber wherein he, then being Duke of Anjou, had contrived the French Maſſacre. So let thine enemies periſh, O Lord.

Talia quiſque luat, qualia quiſque facit!

Verſe 7. And I heard another] That in the mouth of two witneſſes this truth might be eſtabliſhed. Let God be juſtified, and every mouth ſtopped.

Out of the altar] Under which lie the ſouls of thoſe that were ſlain for the teſtimony of Jeſus, chap. 6. See the Note above on verſe 6.

Verſe 8. Upon the Sun] The Popes ſupremacy, ſay ſome; the Scriptures, ſay others; by the light whereof they are laid open to the world (dancing naked in a net, and yet not ſeeing their own nakedneſs, as Mr. Philpot Martyr told Chadſey) and by the dint whereof, God ſmites the earth, Iſa. 11. 4. that is, the conſciences of thoſe Popelings, glued to the earth. He even hews them by his prophets, and ſlaies them by the words of his mouth. But this interpretation touching the Scriptures ſome hold to be dangerous: becauſe upon what ſubject ſoever theſe vials fell, the wrath of God fell together with them upon the ſame, verſe 1. they underſtand therefore by Sun the houſe of Auſtria, or the higheſt authority that holds on Rome. Act. and Mon. fol. 1657. Hoſ. 6. 5.

Verſe 9. And men were ſcorched] Or parched, ſcalded, roaſted: This is by accident in regard of the Scriptures: for the Lord ſpeaketh peace to his people; and his word is good to thoſe that are good, Mic. 2. 7. But as Origen ſaith of devils, ſo may we ſay of Papiſts; there is no greater torment to them, then the Word of God. In hoc eorum omnis flamma eſt, in hac uruntur incendio. Hence they burn up Bibles, tanquam doctrinam peregrinam, καυματίσθησαν. Reliquias non peregrinam, as ſtrange doctrine: Hence they cenſure S. Paul as favouring of Hereſie, and could finde in their hearts to purge his Epiſtles. Eckius is not afraid to ſay, That Chriſt did never command his Diſciples to write, but to preach only. Bellarmine ſaith, the Bible is no more then commonitoriſm, a kind of ſtore-houſe for advice. Haſius ſaith, That the Popes interpretation, though it ſeem never ſo repugnant to the Scripture, is nevertheleſs the very Word of God. The Council of Baſil anſwered the Huſſites (requiring Scripture-proofs for ſuch doctrines as were thruſt upon them) that the Scriptures were not of the being of the Church, but of the wel-being only; that traditions were the touchſtone of doctrine, and foundation of faith.

Lib. de verbo Dei non scripto.

And blaſphemed the name of God] The truth of God contained in the Scriptures. What a devil made thee to meddle with the Scripture? ſaid Stephen Gardiner to Marbeck. They tell us of divers that have been poſſeſt by that means; and aſſure us, that our condemnation is ſo expreſſly ſet down in our own Bibles, and is ſo clear to all the world, that nothing more needs hereto, then that we know to read, and to have our eyes in our heads at the opening thereof.

Verſe 10. Upon the ſeat of the beaſt] This City of Rome, which was never yet beſieged (ſince it became the ſeat of Antichriſt) but it was taken, and ſhall be again ſhortly to purpoſe. Rather, ſay ſome, by Seat is meant his Kingdom; the Popes ſingular ſole authority and Monarchical frame of Church-government, &c.

And his kingdom was full of darkneſs] It appeared to be ſo (as motes appear in the Sun-ſhine) by the clear light of truth ſhining upon it. A Scottiſh miſt is here already fallen upon a piece of his Kingdom; and what further ſervice God hath for their and our armies to do againſt the Pope in Ireland, or elſwhere, we expect and pray. God grant us good agreement among our ſelves, and then much may be done abroad.

Exemplis.

And they gnawed their tongues] Being as mad with malice, as Boniface the 8. was of diſcontent; who being ſuddenly taken priſoner at his fathers houſe by Sara Columnum his mortal enemy, and brought to Rome, laid up in the Caſtle of S. Angelo, within 35. dayes after, moſt miſerably died in his madneſs, renting himſelf with his teeth, and devouring his own fingers.

Turk. hiſt. 126.

Verſe 11. And blaſphemed the God of heaven] As they did in 88. when the Spaniſrds gave out, That Chriſt was turned Lutheran; And as Faux the Gunpouder-traitor did, when he told thoſe that took him, that not God, but the devil had brought to light and to naught that deſperate deſign. Thus they ſet their mouths againſt heaven, and their tongue walketh thorow the earth: as if Auguſtus Ceſar were dealing with ſome god Neptune; or the three ſons, trying their archery at their fathers heart, to ſee who can ſhoot higheſt. What an execrable blaſphemy is that of John Hunt a Roman Catholick in his humble appeal to K. Iames in the ſixth Chapter of that Pamphlet? The God of the Proteſtants is the moſt uncivil and evil-mannered God of all thoſe who have born the names of gods upon the earth; yea worſe then Pan, god of the clowns, which can endure no Ceremonies, nor good manners at all.

And repented not] This Leopard (chap. 13.2.) can never change his ſpots; becauſe they are not in the skin, but in the fleſh and bones; in the ſinews and moſt inward parts: Tigers rage and tear themſelves at the ſound of a drum, and at the ſmell of ſweet ſpices, ſo do theſe ſavage Papiſts, when called to repent.

Verſe 12. Upon the great River Euphrates] i.e. Upon whatſoever yet hindreth the deſtruction of ſpiritual Babylon, and the coming in of the Jews; as the Turkiſh Empire, &c.

Others underſtand this Text of the Jews, who are moſt of them in the Eaſt, diſperſed thorow Turky, Tartary (the ten Tribes eſpecially) and China. Iunius ſaith, That which is called the land of Sinim, Iſa. 49.12. may probably be meant of China; which if it be the meaning, there may be many of the Jews, whoſe converſion we daily expect and pray for. Janizaries, Janizaries, blood-hounds, vultures, whose nest (as Aristotle saith) cannot be found; yet they will leave all games to follow an Army, because they delight to feed on carrion.

Like frogs] For their filthiness, impudency, lequacity, with their continual brekekekex coax coax. Aristoph.

Come out of the mouth] That is, by the counsel and command, by vertue of that vow of Mission, whereby the Jesuits are bound to the Pope, to go whither he shall send them, about whatsoever attempt he shall enjoyn them. Yea, if their Governours command them a voyage to China or Peru, without dispute or delay they presently set forward. Hence haply they are called spirits.

Verse 14. The spirits of devils] Or breathing devils.

Working miracles] Lying wonders, 2 Thes. 2. 9.

Unto the Kings of the earth] The Popes Nuncio's Legats à latere, and other emissaries stir up the spirits of Princes to embroil the world with wars, for the upholding of his tottering greatness; but all in vain. The greatest Impostors have ever been the greatest Courtiers. The Arrians in their age, and of them the Jesuites learned it. As Pharaohs frogs, they get into Kings bed-chambers.

And of the whole world] Papists shall call in the help of forraign Princes out of Asia, Africa, America, to suppress the hereticks, as they call them. But with evil success: for they shall associate themselves only to be broken in pieces, Isa. 8. 9. Exorientur, sed exurrentur, Rev. 19. 18. The mountain of the Lord shall be lifted up above all mountains. These auxiliaries shall speed no better then those subsidiary Syrians, 2 Sam. 10. 18, 19.

Verse 15. I come as a thief] Who gives no warning. See the Note on Mat. 24. 44. I come sudddenly, secretly, yea and also violently and terribly. See chap. 3. 3. Luke 12. 34. 1 Thes. 5. 2.

Blessed is he that watcheth] The prophecy is here interrupted (as Gen. 49. 18.) to fore-warn and fore-arm the Saints, Luke 12. 37, 38, 43. they are three times said to be blessed that watch.

And keepeth his garments] Keepeth himself unspotted of the world, undefiled in the way.

Lest he walk naked, &c.] See chap. 3. 18.

Verse 16. And he gathered] God hath an over-ruling hand in that which the frogs of Rome do at the Courts of Kings, and ordereth the disorders of the world to his own glory.

Called in the Hebrew Armageddon] That is, they shall receive such a famous foil, such as Sisera did at the waters of Megiddo. Judg. 5. 19.

Verse 17. Into the air] The Popish air, the kingdom of Satan, Ephes. 2. 2.

Saying, It is done] What is done? The mysterie of iniquity is abolished, and the mysterie of God is fulfilled. So Cicero when he had slain those of Catilines conspiracy, he came to the people, and said, vixerunt, they were alive, but now the world is well rid of them.

Verse 18. And there were voices] A description of the last judgement when heaven and earth shall conspire together for the punishment of the wicked. See Mat 24. 2 Pet. 3. and 2 Thes. 1. 8.

Verse 19. And the great City] The whole Antichristian State.

Divided into three parts] By the earthquake disjected and dissipated. Or, Divided into three parts, that is, into three factions, 1. Stiff Papists. 2. Converts. 3. Neuters.

And the cities of the Nations] That came to aid Antichrist.

And great Babylon] Augustine and other Ancients do call Rome the Western Babylon; and do so compare them, as that Abraham was born in the flourish of the first Babylon, Christ of the second. The Iesuites here, though they grant Rome to be Babylon, yet they would have it to be Rome Heathen under the Emperours, and not Rome Christian under the Popes. But it must be Rome Christian, as it appears by a double departure. 1. Of Babylon from the Church. Rev. 17. 1. Babylon is called a whore. 2. Of the Church from Babylon. Rev. 18. 3. The Temple of God is the seat of Antichrist, saith Paul. 2 Thes. 2.

The cup of wine] That wherein God delights, as a man would do to drink a cup of generous wine.

THis and the following Chapters are ſet for the explanation of the dark and difficult paſſages in the former, in the three laſt vials eſpecially.

I will ſhew unto thee] Thou ſhalt not only be an ear, but an eye-witneſs. Segnius irritant animum demiſſa per aures, Quam quæ ſunt oculis commiſſa fidelibus.

The judgement] The damnation of her; the deſtruction is reſerved to the next Chapter.

Of the great whore] The whore of Babylon, more infamous and notorious then any Thais, Lais, Phryne, Meſſalina, Oreſtilla (cujus prater formam nihil unquam bonus laudavit) or Pope Joanne, of whom Funccius the Chronologer ſpeaketh thus; Ego Funccius non dubito quin divinitus ita ſit permiſſum ut fœmina fieret Pontifex eadem meretrix, &c. I doubt not but that God therefore permitted a notorious harlot to be advanced to the Popedom (and this about the very time when the Popes were moſt buſie in ſubjecting the Kings of the earth, and making them their vaſſals) that he might point out to men this whore here mentioned, with whom the Kings of the earth committed fornication.

Saluſt. Func. com. in Chronol.

Verſe 2. With whom the Kings] As ſubmitting their ſcepters to his keys; and becoming his feudataries.

And the inhabiters of the earth] So that ſhe is not a noble whore only, but a common Trumpet, proſtituting her ſelf to the meaneſt for their money, as in the pardon office.

Have been made drunk] Hence it is ſo difficult to convert Idolaters: there is no dealing with a man that is drunk. Whoredom and wine take away the heart, Hoſ. 4.

Of her fornication] Both ſpiritual and corporal. Sixtus Quintus lupanar utriuſque Veneris Romæ condidit (ſaith Agrippa) & deceſſit tabidus voluptate.

Verſe 3. Into the wilderneſs] Whether the true Church fled, Chap. 12. of which they muſt be (ſaith one) that can learn to know the Romiſh Church to be a Whore, condemned of God.

I ſaw a woman] See the Note on Verſe 1.

Sit upon] Not going a-foot, as Chriſt and the Apoſtles did; but magnificently mounted, as the Pope is ever, either upon a ſtately palfrey (Emperours holding his ſtirrop) or upon mens ſhoulders. England was once called the Popes Aſs, for bearing his intolerable exactions. This Aſs he held by the ears inſtead of a bridle.

Upon a ſcarlet-coloured beaſt] The proper colour of the Court of Rome; and it well ſerves to ſet forth their pomp and their hypocriſie. Innocent the fourth gave a red hat to his Cardinals, to ſhew them (as he ſaid) that they ſhould be ready to ſhed their blood for the truth. But that Painter was nearer the point, who being blamed by a Cardinal for colouring the viſages of Peter and Paul too red, tartly replied, that he painted them ſo as blushing at the Ratelineſs and ſinfulneſs of his ſucceſſors.

Full of names of blaſphemy] His head only before was bucked with the blaſphemy, Chap. 13. 1. now his whole body. Thus evil men and ſeducers grow worſe and worſe, deceiving and being deceived, 2 Tim. 3.13.

Verſe 4. In purple and ſcarlet] Clothing for Kings and Nobles, over whom this whore domineers much more then the concubines did over the Kings of Perſia.

κεχρυσωμ. And decked with gold] Gr. Guilded with gold, to note her hypocriſie, and outſideneſs, gold gold without, copper within. The Pope ſtiles himſelf the ſervant of Gods ſervants, but yet ſtamps in his coin, That Nation and Countrey that will not ſerve thee ſhall be rooted out. At the abſolution of King Iohn of England, 8000 marks of ſilver were preſently delivered to Pandolfus the Popes Legate, who trampled it under his feet, as contemning that baſe matter, but yet received it, and ſent it away to Rome. Daniels hiſt.

And precious ſtones and pearls] Beſides the rich ſtones that are in the Popes tripple crown, of ineſtimable price and value, he carries in his pantofle (which he holds out to be kiſſed) the picture of the croſs, ſet in pearls and precious ſtones, Ut plenis faucibus crucem Chriſti derideat, ſaith one. Pope Sixtus quintus was wont to give to Tireſia his harlot, pantofles covered with pearls. He ſpent two hundred and threeſcore thouſand crowns upon a Conduit, which he built for his pleaſure: and yet he brought in fifty hundred thouſand crowns into the new treaſury built by himſelf in the Caſtle of S. Angelo. At the coronation of Pope Leo X. a thouſand thouſand crowns are ſaid to have been ſpent in one day. Pope Paul the ſecond was wont to ſleep all day, and ſpend whole nights in weighing monies, and beholding jewels and precious pictures. Heidfeld. Iac. Revius. Uno eo die 1000000 aureorum expendit.

A golden cup full of abominations] Gold, if it be right, they ſay diſcovers and expels poiſon. Put poiſon into a cup of gold, and it will hiſs and ſend up certain circles like rainbows. Hereby is ſignified (ſaith an authour) that God threatneth judgement and fire to thoſe that pour poiſon into divine doctrine, as the Pope doth with his mad mixtures. He that argued from the Letters of Papa. P. Poculum, A. Aureum, P. Plenum, A. Abominationum, argued no leſs wittily, then that other, who of Roma made Radix omnium malorum. Iac. Rev. 261. Ibid.

Verſe 5. Myſterie] This word Myſterie is in the Popes mitre, ſaith Brocard the Venetian, and many more who have been at Rome, and profeſs to have ſeen it. The whole Antichriſtian ſtate is a Myſterie of iniquity, 2 Theſ. 2. 7. and is much converſant about myſteries, Sacraments, Ceremonies, pompous rites, &c. murders, treaſons, theſts, &c. they eaſily diſpenſe with, but none of their Ceremonies. Let God, ſay they, ſee to the breach of his own Law; we will look to ours. Rome was raiſed in a myſterie; ſhe grew to her greatneſs inſenſibly and cunningly. Her Biſhop is both an Æmulus and an Oppoſite to Chriſt; One that would ſeem like him, a Vice-Chriſt. Ἀντίχριστος, and yet is his chiefeſt Adverſary; this is the myſterie of iniquity. See 2 Theſ. 2. 7. with the Note there. D. Iames of the corr. of Script. Preface.

Babylon the great] Rome reſembling the Aſſyrian Babylon in pride, Idolatry, filthineſs, but eſpecially in cruelty toward the Church; See the Babylonian cruelty graphically deſcribed, Jer. 51. 34. and make the compariſon.

The mother of harlots] The Church of Rome to this day delights to be ſtiled holy-mother Church. Holy ſhe is in the ſenſe that the Hebrews call harlots. And ſuch a mother, as baſtards have for their mother, by whoſe name they are called; the Father is ſeldom mentioned by them.

Verſe 6. Drunken with the blood, &c.] Biſhop Bonner delivered Richard Woodman, with four more, requiring of them to be but honeſt men, members of the Church Catholike, and to ſpeak good of him. And no doubt (ſaith Woodman) he was worthy to be praiſed, becauſe he had been ſo faithful an aid in the devil his maſters buſineſs: for he had burned good M. Philpot the ſame morning. In whoſe blood his heart was ſo drunk, as I ſuppoſe he could not tell what he did, as it appeared to us both before and after. For but two days before, he promiſed us we ſhould be condemned that ſame day that we were delivered; yea and the morrow after he ſought for ſome of us again, yea, and that earneſtly. He waxed dry after his great drunkenneſs; wherefore he is like to have blood to drink in hell, as he is worthy, if he repent not, &c. It is wiſdom (ſaid a certain unknown good woman in a letter to Bonner) it is wiſdom for me and all other ſimple ſheep of the Lord, to keep us out of your butcherly ſtall, as long as we can; eſpecially ſeeing you have ſuch ſtore already, that you are not able to drink all their blood, leſt you ſhould break your belly, and therefore let them lie ſtill, and die for hunger, &c. Thus I kept the bandogs at ſtaves end (ſaid Shetterden the Martyr) not as thinking to eſcape them, but that I would ſee the Foxes leap above ground for my blood, if they can reach it. Act. and Mon. fol. 1800. Ibid. 1672. Ibid. 1521.

I wondered with great admiration] All things are portentous in the Popedom: What monſters were Pope Iohn 12. and Hildebrand, as Luitprandus deſcribes the one, and Lib. 6. de reb. geſt. in Europ. in vita Hildeb.

Cardinal Benno the other, both of their own ſide? Tertia claſſis continet Papas vel potius ωάνας, ſaith Alſtedius. After the thouſandth year of Chriſt, there was nowhere leſs piety, then in thoſe that dwelt neareſt to Rome, as Machiavel obſerveth.

Verſe 7. Wherefore didſt thou marvel?] Nil admirari proſè res eſt una, Numici. We wonder at things out of ignorance of the cauſes of them. Hinc admiratio peperit philoſophiam.

Verſe 8. Was, and is not] Was, before the time of this Revelation in the Roman government, which was afterward uſurped by the Pope. A thing that the firſt Biſhops of Rome dreamt not of. And yet Tertullian taxeth the riſing ambition of the Popes in his time, thus; I hear, ſaith he, that there is an edict ſet forth, and that very peremptory, in theſe terms, Pontifex, ſcilicet maximus Epiſcopus Epiſcoporum dicit. Thus ſaith the high-Prieſt, the Biſhop of Biſhops, &c. Odi faſtum illius Eccleſiæ, I hate the pride of that Church of Rome, ſaith Baſil.

Go into perdition] Go, not run: by degrees, not all at once. He now takes long ſtrides toward the bottomleſs pit; which is but a little afore him, and even gapes for him. There ſtands a cold ſweat on all his limbs already.

Shall wonder] Admiration bred ſuperſtition; and illumination drawes men off it. Iulius Palmer, Martyr, was a moſt obſtinate Papiſt all King Edwards days: and yet afterwards, in Q. Maries time, ſuffered moſt cruel death at the Papiſts hands at Newbury, for the moſt ready and zealous profeſſion of the truth. His words to one Bullingham, walking in Pauls after his converſion, were theſe; Oh that God had revealed theſe matters unto me in time paſt! I would have bequeathed this Romiſh Religion, or rather irreligion to the devil of hell, from whence it came. Believe them not, Bullingham, I will rather have theſe knees pared off, then I will kneel to yonder Jackanapes (meaning the rood.)

Act. and Mon. 1755, 1756.

And yet is] In regard of that Imperial power then extant, which the Pope ſhould afterwards take to himſelf.

Verſe 9. Here is the minde] q. d. Here is work for wiſe men to buſie their brains about. Sapientia eſt vel eodicibus vel cordibus.

Seven mountains] The Jeſuites cannot deny but that Rome is here pointed at, as being ſet upon ſeven hils. So the ancient Rome was, where of the preſent Rome is but a carkaſs, retaining nothing of the old but her ruines, and the cauſe of them her ſins.

Verſe 10. And there are ſeven Kings] That is, kinds of government.

Five are fallen] Kings, Conſuls, Dictators, Decemvirs, Tribunes.

One is] i. e. The Heathen Emperours.

And the other not yet to come] ſcil. The Chriſtian Emperours.

A ſhort ſpace] ſc. At Rome: for Conſtantine ſoon tranſlated the ſeat of the Empire to Bizantium, calling it Conſtantinople, and left Rome to be the Popes neſt. The Emperour Conſtans, nephew to Heraclius, and after him, Otho had ſome thoughts to ſet up again at Rome, but could not; that ſo the kingdom of the Church fore-told by Daniel, might there be ſeated, ſaith Genebrard; if he had ſaid the kingdom of Antichriſt foretold by Iohn the Divine, he had hit it.

And is of the ſeven] i. e. Shall exerciſe that Monarchical power that was before in the ſeven heads.

Verſe 12. Are ten kings] Of ten ſeveral Kingdoms, Naples, Spain, Portugal, France, Poleny, Bohemia, Hungary, Denmark, Sweden, and this of England, which as it was the firſt of the ten that ſubmitted to the Popes yoke, ſo was it the firſt that ſhook it off again in Hen. 8. time.

Verſe 13. Theſe have one mind] This is the unity, or rather conſpiracy of the Church of Rome. The Spouſe only is but one, Cant. 6. 9. Other ſocieties are but as the clay in the toes of Nebuchadnezzars image: they may cleave together but not incorporate one into another. There is a great deal of ſeeming unity under Antichriſt. The Turks alſo have as little diſſenſion in their religion, as any. But well may that garment have no ſeam that hath no ſhape. Bellarmine notes a providence, that in the ninth age there ſprang up no new hereſies. But how could there, when little religion was on foot, beſides ſuperſtition and hereſies?

Verſe 15. Are peoples] Fitly called waters for their inſtability and impetuoſity.

Verſe 16. Theſe ſhall hate] As baſe fellows uſe to hate their harlots, when they finde them falſe.

And ſhall make her deſolate] Shall deny to defend her.

And naked] By denying her maintenance, and laying her open to the world by their Remonſtrances. King Henry 8. and the French King, ſome half a year before their death, were at a point to have utterly rooted the Biſhop of Rome out of their Realms, and to exhort the Emperour to do the ſame, or elſe to break off from him. The Realm of France was ready (upon the Popes refuſal to re-ble& K. Henry 4 upon converſion to them) to with-draw utterly from the obedience of his See, and to erect a new Patriarch over all the French Church. The then Arch-biſhop of Burges was ready to accept it; and but that the Pope, in fear thereof, did haſten his benediction, it had been effected, to his utter diſgrace and decay. Act. and Mon. Spec. Europ.

And ſhall eat her fleſh] Be ſo bitterly bent againſt her, that they could finde in their hearts to tear her with their teeth. See Iob 19. 22. We read of two notable thieves in the kingdom of Naples (the one called himſelf Pater noſter, and the other Ave-Maria) that had ſlain an hundred and ſixteen men at ſeveral times, & in ſeveral places. Theſe two were at length taken and tormented to death by the command of the Magiſtrate, with hot burning pinchers, &c. and made to dye piece-meal. It were but reaſon that Chriſtian Princes ſhould uſe like zeal and ſeverity againſt that grand ſoul-murtherer the Pope.

And burn her with fire] For an old bawd. It is reported that in Meroe, the Prieſts of Jupiter had ſo bewitched the people with their ſuperſtition, that they would ſometimes ſend to the king of Ethiopia for his head; which was never denied them, till it came to King Ergames, who upon ſo inſolent a demand, ſlew them all, and took away their Prieſtood. Why is not the ſame now done to the Bridge-makers of Rome? Alex. ab Alexandro.

Verſe 17. For God hath put] As he ſent Nebuchadnezzar againſt Tyre, Alexander againſt Aſia, and Attilas againſt Rome, who ſtiroamed himſelf the Worlds ſcourge; ſo he will one day ſend theſe Kings againſt Rome. It had been burnt when Charls the 5. took it, but that the ſouldiers were kept in by a kinde of violence. Gods time was not yet come for that purpoſe.

Verſe 18. Is that great City] Rome, that radix omnium malorum. This is confeſſed by Bellarmine, Ribera, Alcaſar, and other Jeſuites. The Rhemiſts are ſo ſtraited, that they know not which way to turn them, or how to deny ſo clear a truth, which yet they are not willing to acknowledge. The wit of hereticks will better ſerve them to deviſe a thouſand ſhifts to elude the truth, then their pride will ſuffer them once to yield and acknowledge it.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſe 1. I ſaw another Angel]

SOme excellent and worthy man (ſaith M. Brightman) ſuch an one as ſhould come ſuddenly before he be looked for, as thoſe things do that ſlip down from heaven.

And the earth was lighted] He delivered himſelf clearly and expreſly, ſo as that all men may well underſtand his meaning. Ribera the Jeſuit gives this note upon this text, that the judgement of Romes deſolation ſhall be (not kept ſecret, but) made manifeſt to all men.

Verſe 2. And he cried mightily] So to awaken Babylon, that ſlept no leſs ſecurely then that old Babylon, whoſe King Sheſack was feaſting and carouſing in the bowls of the Sanctuary, when the City was taken the ſame night. and shall fall penally. This was also long since foretold by Sibylla in the eighth book of her Oracles, Καὶ σὺ θείσμ᾽ ἔσῃ κόσμῳ, καὶ ἄοικος ἁπάντων.

Tota eris in cineres quasi nunquam Roma fuisses.

De rem. utr. fort. dial. 118. Rome (during the Roman felicity) was never taken but by the Gauls; but since it became Pontificial, it hath been made a prey to all barbarous Nations, and never besieged by any that took it not. There yet stands, near at hand, a second Babylon (saith Petrarch) citò itidem casura, si esset is vir. This would soon be down, if you would but stand up men.

The habitation of devils] Which, by a sweet providence of God, for the good of mankinde, are banished (as likewise fierce and wild beasts are) to deserts and dispeopled places. See Mat. 12.43. (It is an allusion to Isa. 13.20. & 14.23. Jer. 50.39.) yet not so, but that by divine permission, they haunt and pester the greatest throngs of people, yea the holiest assemblies. Some take the words in another sense, thus; it is become an habitation of devils, that is, of idols; and this hath wrought her ruine. In the year, 610. Boniface 4. instituted the feast of All-Saints, after that he had begg'd of the Emperour the Pantheon of Rome, which he consecrated to the honour of All-Saints, and set up the Virgin Mary in the place of Cybele, the mother of the gods.

Verse 4. Another voice] This was Christs voice, whether mediate or immediate, it appears not. See Jer. 51 45.

My people] A people Christ had, and still hath, where Antichrist most prevaileth. There are thought to be no less then 20000 Protestants in Civil it self, a chief City of Spain. Even in Italy there are full 4000 professed Protestants; but their paucity and obscurity (saith mine Author) shall enclose them in a cipher.

Partakers of her sins] Esto procul Roma qui cupis esse pius. Roma, vale, vidi, satis est vidisse, &c. John Knox refused a Bishoprick offered him by King Edward 6. as having aliquid commune cum Antichristo. Adam Damlip Martyr had been a great Papist, and chaplain to Fisher, Bishop of Rochester; after whose death he travelled to Rome, where he thought to have found all godliness and sincere religion. In the end he found there, as he said, such blaspheming of God, contempt of true religion, looseness of life, and abundance of all abominations, that he abhorred any longer there to abide; although he was greatly requested by Cardinal Pool there to continue, and to read three lectures a week in his house; for the which he offered him great entertainment. The like is recorded of M. Rough Martyr, that being before Bonner, he affirmed that he had been twice at Rome, and there had seen plainly with his eyes, that the Pope was the very Antichrist; for there he saw him carried on mens shoulders, and the false named Sacrament born before him; yet was there more reverence given to him, then to that which they counted their God. M. Ascham (schoolmaster to Q. Elizabeth) was wont to thank God that he was but nines days in Italy, wherein he saw in that one City of Venice more liberty to sin, then in London he ever heard of in nine years.

It is dangerous conversing with wicked men, 1. For infection of sin. 2. Verſe 7. She hath glorified her ſelf] As mother of Churches, Queen of Nation. Steuchus (one of her Paraſites) ſaith, That Kings have but the uſe and adminiſtration of their Kingdoms; the right and property belongs to her. Pope Boniface wrote thus to Philip the Fair, King of France, Volumus te ſcire te in temporali & ſpirituali nobis ſubjacere, &c. Contra ſentientes pro inſanis habemus. We would ye ſhould know, that ye are to be ſubject unto us both in temporals and ſpirituals: and that none that are in their right minds can be otherwiſe minded. I would your ſingular Fooliſhneſs ſhould know that I acknowledge no ſuch ſubjection, &c. It was tartly and trimly replied by one Leonard to Ruſtandus the Popes Legat, claiming all the Churches here in England to be the Popes, Omnes Eccleſias Papæ eſſe, tuitione non fruitione, defenſione non diſſipatione; That if the Pope had ſuch right to all Churches, it was to defend them, not to devour them. Alfred. Chron. 359, 395. Come in one day] To confute their fond conceit of an eternal Empire. See the like, Iſa. 48. 9. When the wars began in Germany, anno 1619. it was reported, that a great braſs Image of the Apoſtle Peter (that had Tu es Petrus, &c. Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church, engraven about it) ſtanding in Saint Peters Church at Rome, there was a great and maſſie ſtone fell down upon it, and ſo ſhattered it to pieces, that not a letter of that ſentence was left legible, ſave theſe words, Ædificabo Eccleſiam meam, I will build my Church. This was ominous to that tottering title of Rome, and might have taught the Popelings, That God is about to build his Church upon the ruines of their worm-eaten title. The Lord thereby ſeemed to ſay the ſame unto them, that once he did to Iſrael by Ezekiel, An end is come, the end is come, it watcheth for thee, behold it is come. Sed ſurdis fabulam. This hath been long and loud rung in their ears, but they will not be warned. Ezek. 7. 6.

Verſe 11. And the merchants of the earth] The Popes indulgencers, and other officers of his Exchequer. What huge ſums of money did Tecelius and his companions rake together out of Germany? The Pope had yearly out of England above nine tun of gold; Polydor Virgil was his Collectour of the Peter-pence here. Otto (one of the Popes Muſcipulatores, Mice-catchers, as the ſtory cals him) departing hence, left not ſo much money in the whole Kingdom, as he either carried with him, or ſent to Rome before him. It was truly and trimly ſaid by Pope Innocent 4. Vere enim hortus deliciarum Papis fuit tum Anglia, & puteus inexhauſtus. England was then a gallant garden to the Pope, and a well-ſpring of wealth that could not be drawn dry. Cardinal Wolſey emptied the land of twelveſcore thouſand pounds, to relieve and ranſom Pope Clement the ſeventh, impriſoned by the Duke of Burbon. And being himſelf ſent Embaſſadour beyond ſea for the Popes releaſe, and coming through Canterbury toward Dover, he was ſeen to weep tenderly at Maſs for the Popes calamity.

The Leaguers here for the liberty of the Kingdom in the days of King John, drove Martin the Popes Publican out of the Land; the King alſo curſed him grievouſly at parting, with Diabolus te ad inferos ducat & perducat. But now much more then ever theſe merchants want Chapmen, as Bellarmine ſadly complains; their markets are well fallen, their Euphrates much dried up.

Verse 13. And Cinnamon] Galen writes, that in his time cinnamon was very rare, and hard to be found, except in the store-houses of great Princes. And Pliny reports, That a pound of cinnamon was worth 1000 denarii, that is 150. crowns of our money. Li. 1. Andidot.

And chariots] Or Sedans, as we call them.

And slaves] Gr. bodies; so slaves are called; because their masters commands reach only to their bodies, and not to their souls. Σώματα.

And the souls of men] Tecelius the Popes pardonmonger, perswaded the people in Germany, that whosoever would give ten shillings should at his pleasure deliver one soul out of the pains of purgatory; and as soon as the money rang in the bason, that soul was set at liberty. But if it were one jot less then ten shillings it would profit them nothing. This gainful gullery Luther cried down with all his might, and so marred the Market. This gave occasion to that saying of Erasmus, whom when the Elector of Saxony asked, Why Luther was so generally hated? He answered, for two faults especially; he hath been too-busie with the Popes crown, and the Monks paunches. Act. and Mon. fol. 771. Sculset. Annal. dec. 1

Verse 14. And the fruits] Those first ripe fruits, Mic. 7. 1. greedily desired and bought up at any rate by the richer and daintier sort of people.

Which were dainty and goodly] Gr. Fat and fair liking; pleasant to the eye, as well as to the taste; confections, suckets, sweet meats, second and third services. . Λιπαρὰ καὶ λαμπρά.

Verse 15. Which were made rich by her] By their fat benefices, Commendams, golden Prebendaries, some one yielding ten or twenty thousand by the year. The Archbishoprick of Toledo is worth an hundred thousand pounds a year; which is a greater revenue then some Kings have had. What a vast estate had Wolsey gotten? So that rich and wretched Cardinal Henry Beauford Bishop of Winchester, and Chancellour of England in the raign of Henry the sixth, who asked, Wherefore should I dye being so rich? &c. Spec. Europ. Act. and Mon.

Verse 16. With gold and precious stones] All these avail not in the day of wrath. Neither need we envy wicked men their plenty: it is their portion, all they are like to have. The whole Turkish Empire is nothing else, saith Luther, Nisi panis mica, quam dives pater familias projicit canibus, a crust cast to the dogs, by God the great housholder. I have no stronger argument (said the same Luther) against the Popes kingdom, Quam quod sine cruce regnat, then this, that he suffereth nothing. Surely there's the more behind, there will be bitterness in the end no doubt.

Verse 17. So great riches is come to nought] Gr. Is desolated, or become a wilderness. ἠρημώθη. Petrarch writeth, that in the treasury of Pope John 22. were found by his heirs two hundred and fifty tuns of gold. And of Boniface 8. it is recorded, That he was able to shew more money then all the Kings in Christendom.

And every shipmaster] i. e. Cardinal, Patriarch, Archbishop, though but titular and imaginary, without jurisdiction, as are the Patriarchs of Constantinople, Antioch, Jerusalem and Alexandria; which the Pope successively consecrates, ever since the holy Land and the Provinces about it were in the hands of Christian Princes, anno 1100 so loath is the Pope to lose the remembrance of any superiority or title that he hath once compassed. Spec. Europ.

And all the company] The Cardinals and Archbishops train and retinue, those in office especially. What a pompous family kept Wolsey, consisting of one Earl, nine Barons, very many Knights and Esquires, and others, to the number of four hundred. Rex Platon. p. 26.

And sailers] Bishops, Abbots, Priars, &c. In a Parliament holden here at Leicester. A. D. 1413. in the raign of Henry 5. a complaint was exhibited against the Popish Clergies excess. This bill (saith Edw. Hall the Chronicler) made the fat Abbots to swear, the proud Priors to frown, the poor Friars to curse the silly Nuns, to weep, and all her merchants to fear that Babel would then down. But Gods time was not yet.

And as many as trade by the sea] All the Clergy, the Jesuites especially, without whose lusty help (saith one) S. Peters fish-boat had stuck in the sand, and had rushed against the rocks long since. M. Brightman.

Verse 18. What City is like unto this] q.d. Who would have ever thought we should ever have seen this dismal day of Romes destruction? It was wont to be said, Roma

Roma cladibus animosior, Rome is unconquerable. The Pope wrote once to the Turk that threatned him,

Niteris incassum Petri submergere navem;
Fluctuat, at nunquam mergitur illa ratis.

Verse 19. And they cast dust] As men willing to be as far under ground, as now they were above ground. Having lost their livelihood, they had little joy of their lives.

D. Featly his Transl. explod.

All that had ships in the sea] All Church-men, i. e. All, for the most part: some of them have little enough. Sanders was starved, Stapleton was made a professors of a petty University, scarce so good as one of our free-schools. On Harding his Holiness bestowed a Prebend of Gaunt or (to speak more properly) a Gaunt Prebend. Allen was commonly called the starveling Cardinal, &c.

Verse 20. Thou heaven]. i. e. The Church on earth.

And ye holy Apostles, &c.] i.e. Ye Pastours and Teachers; who as ye have been most shot at by her, so now you are specially called to triumph over her, Psal. 58. 11.

M. Forbes.

Verse 21. And a mighty Angel] For further assurance a sign is added, and an allusion made to Jer. 51. 63. And here it is easie to observe a notable gradation; an Angel, a strong Angel taketh a stone, and a great stone, even a millstone, which he letteth not barely fall, but casteth, and with impetuous force thrusteth into the bottom of the sea, whence it cannot be boyed up. Thus is set forth to the eye also the irreparable ruine of Rome.

Verse 22. And the voice of Harpers, &c.] Thine Organs and Sackbuts, thy chaunting and Church-musick shall cease.

And the sound of a millstone] Anciently they used hand-mils, which did make a great noise in the Cities, as Diodate here noteth.

Verse 23. And the light of a candle] The candle of the wicked shall be put out; they that here love darkness better then light, shall hereafter be thrust into outer darkness, where they shall never see the light again, till they see all the world on a light fire.

ἐκβτ☉ ἐξω-τερον.

For thy merchants were the great men] The Pope creates his Cardinals by these words, Estote fratres nostri & Principes mundi, Be ye brethren to us, and Princes of the world. They hold themselves Kings comperes.

Verse 24. And in her was found] Rome hath ever been the slaughter-house of the Saints, as Jerusalem was afore her, Mat. 23.

And of all that were slain] For she hath a hand in all the wars of Europe; besides all the Christian blood shed by her instigation, in those holy wars, as they called them, for the recovery of the Land of Canaan.

CHAP. XIX.

Verse 1. I heard a great voice]

IN obedience to that exhortation, Chap. 18. 20. Rejoyce over her, thou heaven. &c.

Saying Alleluiah] i. e. Praise the Lord. Was not he a wise man that gave this derivation of the word Al altissimus, le levatus est, lu lugebant Apostoli, ja jam resurrexit? Acutum sane decompositum. This word is in the old Testament first used, Psal. 104. 35. where consuming of sinners is mentioned as in the new Testament here, where the destruction of Antichrist is fore-told. Praise is therefore here given to God in the Hebrew tongue, saith One, because the Hebrews or Iews shall acknowledge the Lord Iesus with us.

M. Bulk'y.

Unto the Lord] Gr. Is the Lords, as Psal. 3. 8. He is the true proprietary.

Verse 2. Which did corrupt the earth] I read of one, who journeying to Rome, as soon as he came within the City shut his eyes, and so kept them; as resolving to see nothing in that City (which he knew to be very corrupt, and a corrupter of others) but only the Church of S. Peter. See the Note on Chap. 18. 4.

Sphinx. Philos. p. 753.

Verse 3. And again they said Alleluiah] As unsatisfiable in performing so divine a duty. Some think that the Hebrew word is retained to import, that after Rome is ruinated, the Churches of the Gentiles shall by their unceasing praises provoke the Jews to joyn joyn with them, and concelebrate the mercy: like as the Spouſe, by praiſing her beloved, ſtirred up thoſe dull daughters of Jeruſalem to ſeek him with her, Cant. 5. 9, 10, &c. with Chap 6. 1.

And her ſmoke roſe up] Like that of Sodom: Yet wretched Romaniſts will not be warned, whoſe judgement therefore is here revealed after that of the firing of Rome.

Verſe 4. And the four and twenty Elders] The former Alleluiah was more private: every good heart being lifted up with joy and thankfulneſs, when firſt they hear the good news of Antichriſts overthrow. Now this is the joint Alleluiah of the publick Congregation, praiſing and magnifying God. This may be a further means to move the Iews to come in.

Verſe 5. And a voice came out] This is the Lambs voice, his all-quickning voice, which ſhall rouſe and raiſe the dead and dedolent Iews; powerfully pulling the vail from their hard hearts, which yet were ſomewhat moved and mollified by the former Alleluja's, ſo that now all the ſervants of God, ſmall and great, Iew and Gentile ſhall praiſe him with one concent.

Verſe 6. And I heard as it were the voice] See how morigerous the Saints are, and ready-hearted to obey God. No ſooner are they bidden to praiſe God, but they are at it, dicto citius. See the like Pſal. 27. 8.

Saying Alleluiah] This was the Hoſanna Rabba, as the Iews call it: the victoria Halleluiatica, as the old Brittans called their victory over the Saxons. The ſtory is this. Under the conduct of Germanus (here in Brittain) who came over from France to ſubdue the Pelagian hereſie (which then prevailed amongſt us) againſt a mighty Army of Saxons and Picts, the Brittains prevailed only by the three times pronouncing the word Hallelujah: which voice ecchoing and redoubling from the acclamation of his followers among the mountains, nigh to which the enemy had encamped, frighted them and won the conqueſt, upon which it was called victoria Halleluiatica: D. Vſſier. de Brit. eccleſ. priſmord. p. 332.

Raigneth] i. e. He now maketh it appear that he raigneth, which Averroes and ſome other of the worlds wiſards doubted of, yea denied; becauſe they ſaw bad men proſper, good men ſuffer.

Verſe 7. Hath made her ſelf ready] Being firſt made ready by the grace of Chriſt. Certum eſt nos facere quod facimus; ſed ille facit ut faciamus. The boules of the Candleſtick had no oil but that which dropped from the Olive-branches, Zach. 4. Aug.

Verſe 8. And to her was granted] It is here clear (ſaith an Interpreter) that there ſhall be as great difference between the ſtate of Gods Church now, and that which is to come after Romes ruine, as between the time of honourable perſons only betrothed, and the high, joyful and glorious day of their publick marrying; as between the time of a King coming on his to Kingdom, and his actual and powerfull raigning as King indeed. Bernard.

That ſhe ſhould be arrayed] This alſo is given her, as well as her rich raiment: which ſhe can no more put on by her ſelf, then ſhe can purchaſe it.

Clean and white] Or, Pure and bright. Pure, ſaith one, becauſe imputed righteouſneſs is pure indeed, and hath no ſpot in it; but not bright; you can ſee no great matter in it; it maketh no great ſhew before men (as inherent righteouſneſs doth, Mat. 5. 16.) but before God. A man may be very much defiled and ſubject to many ſcandals, and yet be clothed with the garment of imputed righteouſneſs. M Cotton.

The righteouſneſs of Saints] Gr. Righteouſneſſes, that twofold righteouſneſs, imputed and imparted.

Verſe 9. Write] To wit this enſuing ſentence, for the uſe of poſterity, worthy to be written in letters of gold.

Bleſſed are they that are called] So they have hearts to come at Chriſts call, and not ſhew themſelves unworthy to taſte of his Super by framing excuſes, as thoſe recuſant gueſts did, Luke 14.

Theſe are the true ſayings of God] q. d. This foregoing ſentence is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, 1 Tim. 1, 15.

Verſe 10. And I fell at his feet] So taken he was with the joyful tidings of his Countrey-men (the Jews) converſion, that he fell down as Abraham did upon the good news of Isaac's birth, Gen. 17. 17. And it may be he took this Angel to be Christ, the Angel of the Covenant: But that was his errour. Triste mortalitatis privilegium est, licere aliquando peccare. Euphor.

See thou do it not] An elliptick and concise kind of speech in the Greek, betokening haste and displeasure at that was done. Papists will needs despite the Angels with seeming courtesies and respects; And whereas the Councel of Laodicea saith, It behoveth Christians, Ἀγγέλους μὴ ὀνομάζειν, not to pray to Angels; Surius and Caranza make the words to be, Non oportet Christianos ad angulos congregationes facere: and the title they make De iis qui angulos colunt, in a clean contrary sense to the Councels intention. ἐσχ. μὴ. Cap. 35.

Verse 11. And I saw heaven opened] i. e. He saw things done before his eyes, as it were; so do not we, but are left to conjectures. Here is shewed, saith one, the fall of the Beast, bearer up of the whore, and no question but now highly chafed with her fall. This is the last and noblest act of Christs riding, for the Dragon and his Vicars utter destruction. Thus he. Here is shewed, saith another Interpreter, in what state the Church shall be in, upon the ruine of Rome, even as people standing in arms under their General Christ Iesus for a time, till the last battle be fought, and the enemies destroyed.

Behold, a white horse] Christ riding as an Emperour triumphing, and as a righteous Iudge, Psal. 9. 8. & 96. 10, 13.

Verse 12. His eyes were as a flame of fire] A quick-sighted Iudge, an intelligent warriour. Counsel and strength are for the war, 2 Kings 18. 20.

And on his head were many crowns] Let the Tripple-crowned Pope look to himself: Christ out-crowns him by far.

And he had a name written] His holy and reverend name Jehovah importing his Godhead; for he is Iehovah our righteousness. And as thus, No man knows the Son but the Father, Mat. 11. 26. for as God he is incomprehensible, Judg. 13. 18. What is his name, or what is his sons name, if thou canst tell? Prov. 30. 4. Who shall declare his generation? Isa. 53. 8. Or by this unknown name may be meant his dignity of being head of his Church; which is incommunicable to any other, Phil. 2. 9. Ier. 23.

Verse 13. Dipt in blood] In the blood of his enemies, as a victour returning from a huge slaughter. Cæsar is said to have taken prisoner one million of men, and to have slain as many. Mahomet the first (Emperour of the Turks) to have been the death of 800000 men: Scanderbeg to have slain 800 Turks with his own hand. But our Conquerour shall out-do all these; when he shall tread them in his anger, and trample them in his fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon his garments, and he will stain all his raiment, Isa. 63. 3. Turk. hist.

The word of God] Iohn 1. 1. & 5. 7. Hereby it appears, that this was Iohn the Evangelist that wrote this book. Idiotismus Ioannis. Paneus.

Verse 14. And the armies which were in heaven] The heavenly-minded Heroes, that fight his battles, are all in his livery, horsed and habited as he, in whom they are more then Conquerours, because they are sure to conquer befor they fight.

Verse 15. A sharp sword] The word, Ephes. 6. 17. the rod wherewith he smiteth the earth, Isa. 11. 4. The breath of his mouth, whereby Antichrist shall be over-thrown, as by force of arms, so also of arguments.

The Nations] The Paganish-Papagans. See the book entituled Paganopapismus; wherein is proved that Papism is flat Paganism, and that the Papists do resemble the very Pagans in above sevenscore several things.

And he treadeth the wine-press] At Armageddon, Chap. 16. 16.

Verse 16. And on his thigh] Where his sword hangs, Psal. 45. 3. to shew that he will keep what he hath gained (Vincere scis Annibal, victoria uti nescis, said one) Or, on his thigh, qui filiabitur nomine ejus, Psal. 72. 17. the name of Christ shall endure for ever; it shall be begotten, as one generation is begotten of another, there shall be a successi-on of Christs name; He shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hands, Isa. 53. 10. Confer Gen. 46. 26. Or, on his thigh, that is, on his lower parts, his people. Christ will make the place of his feet glorious, Isa. 60. 13. that is, the Church in their lowest condition. Non minor est virtus quam quærere parta tueri.

Lord of Lords] This title the Pope usurps: but what said Miconius in a letter to Calvin upon the view of the Churches enemies? Gaudeo quod Christus Dominus est; alioqui alioqui totus desperassem, I am glad that Christ is Lord of Lords; for else I should have been utterly out of hope, Verse 17. Standing in the Sun] Where he might best be heard, as an Herald. And he well types out such, as by clear light of truth shall make known the certain destruction of the enemies, before the battle be fought.

Unto the Supper of the great God] They that would not come to the supper of the Lamb, shall be made a supper to the fowls of heaven.

Verse 18. That ye may eat] He alludes to Ezek. 39. 4,17. Gog and Magog were a type of Antichrist. Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief Prince of Meshec and Tubal, saith the Lord, Ezek. 38. 3. where, if Gog be the great Turk, and Meshec, Cappadocia, where he first setled himself, Why should he be called Prince of Tubal also, that is, of Spain, France and Italy, as Hierom and Josephus interpret it (neither do Bellarmine and Gretser dissent?) Is it not to shew, that after the fall of Babylon, the Ant christians shall call in the Turk and other Pagan Princes to invade and distress the Church, that they may all perish together, and feed the fouls with their dead carcases?

Verse 19. And I saw the Beast] The Churches enemies are even ambitious of destruction. Iudgements need not go to finde them out; they run to meet their bane.

Verse 20. And the beast was taken] Taken suddenly, or as he was flying, and so thinking to escape. Dio maketh mention of a notable thief that did much mischief in Italy (afterwards the Popes seat) in the days of Severus. This Emperour used all the means he could to catch him, but could not do it, Quippe qui visus non videbatur, non inveniebatur inventus, deprehensus non capiebatur, saith the Historian. But this subtle Beast meeteth with his match and more; for he is caught and cast into the lake, &c. Christ is a conquerour so soon as ever he comes into the field, Venit, vidit, vicit. When the enemies are tumultuating, he comes upon them as out of an Engine, and hurls them headlong into hell.

ἁλίσκεσθαι, proprie dicitur de iis quos fugientes arripimus. Beza. Dio. in Severo.

And with him the false prophet] This is the same with the Beast; only the Pope is called the Beast in respect of his civil power, and the false prophet in respect of his spiritual. See the Note on Chap. 13. 12. I remember (saith Aretius here) that many learned men in the year, 1546. interpreted these words of the war that then was, and were confident that the Emperour was the beast here mentioned, that should be overcome, and taken in battel by the Protestants; and together with him some false Prophet of his (perhaps the Pope:) but it proved much otherwise, and the event shewed that this application of the Text was false.

Fallitur augurio spes bona saepe suo.

These both were cast alive] Death shall not end their misery, but they shall suffer most exquisite torments. Potentes potenter torquebuntur.

Verse 21. Slain with the sword] Not so deeply damned, and yet so slain as to be made a prey to the infernal vultures; and then the fattest carkase shall be the finest prey, the greatest sinners the sorest sufferers.

Verse 2. And he laid hold on the Dragon] Chap. 12. 7, 9. He took him in a field-fight, and since then till now we have heard little of him, more then that he substituted the Beast, Chap. 13. whose destruction being declared, the prophecy returns to shew the judgement of the Dragon.

he is not bound one hour, Iob 1. 1. Pet. 5. 8. And how his Vicegerent the Beast hath beſtirred him during the thouſand years, who knows not?

A thouſand years] Hos explicare fateor trepide me aggredi, ſaith Pareus. He begins the thouſand at the deſtruction of the Temple, anno 73. and ſo it ends in Pope Hildebrand, who ſtept into that chair of peſtilence, anno 1073. Others begin it at the birth of Chriſt, and end in Sylveſter 2. Others at Chriſts paſſion, and end in Benedict. 9. But they do beſt in my opinion, that begin at Conſtantine, and end in Boniface the 8. who is of his own ſaid to have entered like a fox, raigned as a lion, and died as a dog. He excommunicated the French King, and publiſhed this decree, That the Biſhop of Rome ought to be judged of none, although he ſhould carry innumerable ſouls with him to hell.

Verſe 3. And caſt him into the bottomleſs pit] That is, into the earth, Chap. 12. 9, 12. Chap. 13. 11. the earth is the bottomleſs pit, out of which the Beaſt was raiſed by the Dragon.

Deceive the Nations] The Gentiles, by defending Gentiliſm, and hindering the courſe of the Goſpel amongſt them.

And after that he muſt be loſed] He muſt, becauſe God hath ſo decreed it, for the glory of his own name in the defence of his people; but deſtruction of his enemies. As alſo that the devil may ſhew his malice, which God can reſtrain at his pleaſure. Roger Holland Martyr, ſaid to Bonner; This I dare be bold in God to ſpeak, which by his Spirit I am moved to ſay: that God will ſhorten your hand of cruelty, that for a time you ſhall not moleſt his Church. And after this day in this place ſhall there not any be by him put to the fire and fagot. And it proved ſo; for none after that ſuffered in Smithfield for the teſtimony of the Goſpel.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1852.

Verſe 4. And they ſat upon them] Reſting from former perſecutions, and raigning in righteouſneſs even here upon earth.

And judgement was given unto them] That is, ſay ſome, the ſpirit of diſcerning between Chriſtianity and Antichriſtianiſm; Or the clearing of their innocency, and doing them right, ſay others. Or, they had their chairs, ſeats and conſiſtories, wherein they did both preach the Word, and execute the Church-cenſures, as ſome ſenſe it.

And I ſaw the ſouls] This makes againſt the Millenaries. Souls raign not but in heaven; there are the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, Heb. 12. True it is (as M. Cotton well obſerveth) that there are many devices in the mindes of ſome, to think that Jeſus Chriſt ſhall come from heaven again, and raign here with his Saints upon earth a thouſand years. But they are, ſaith he, but the miſtakes of ſome high expreſſions in Scripture, which deſcribe the judgements poured out upon Gods enemies in making way to the Iews converſion, by the pattern of the laſt judgement. Thus he. The ſouls here mentioned are the ſame I conceive, that were ſeen under the Altar, Rev. 6. 9. and do cry, How long Lord? Theſe are not capable of a bodily reſurrection, nor of an earthly raign.

Cotton his pouring out of the 7. vials, p. 26.

And they lived and raigned with Chriſt] They, that is, thoſe that ſat on the thrones (not they that were beheaded) Lived and raigned, as ſpiritual Kings (after the ſame manner, as they are Prieſts, verſe 6.) for elſe there ſhould be more Kings then Subjects.

With Chriſt] It is not ſaid With Chriſt upon earth; this is an addition to the text: or if the words did import a raigning upon earth, yet this would not inferr an earthly raign for a thouſand years, in great worldly delights, begetting many children, eating and drinking, and enjoying all lawful pleaſures, as ſome dream now-adays. The conceit, I confeſs, is as ancient as Cerinthus the heretike, and Papias (ſcholar to Saint Iohn) a man much reverenced for opinion of his holineſs, but yet homo ingenii pertenuis, ſaith Euſebius, not oppreſſed with wit. Hierom and Auguſtine explode it, as a Iewiſh fable, and declare it to be a great errour, if not an hereſie; ſo do all the ὀρθοδοξώμονες at this day. The Patrons of Chriſts perſonal raign upon the earth, are M. Archer and M. Burroughes, who tels us that if the opinion of ſome concerning Chriſts coming to raign here in the world before the day of judgement be not a truth, he cannot make any thing of many places of Scripture, as this place for one. But if he cannot, yet others can. See an Anſwer to his and M. Archers chief Arguments in M. Bayly his diſſwaſive from the errours of the times, Chap. 21. p. 238.

Moſes's choice, p. 487.

Digitized by Google

Lived not again] By repentance from dead works: or they recovered not the life and immortality that is brought to light by the Gospel.

Until the thousand years] Until, being taught better by Gods faithful witnesses, they abjured Popery.

This is the first resurrection] From Romish superstitions. M. Fox tels us that by the reading of Chaucers books, some were brought to the knowledge of the truth. But here it must be remembred, that a Papist must have two resurrections or conversions, ere he can come to heaven. First, of a Papist he must become in judgement a true Protestant; Secondly, of a Protestant at large, he must become a zealous practitioner of the truth he professeth. Like as corn must be first thrashed out of the straw, and then winnowed out of the chaff. Act. and Mon. fol. 767.

Verse 6. Blessed and happy is he] The holy only have part in this resurrection, and are therefore happy, or out of harms way, as the word signifies. μακάριος.

The second death hath no power] For they are brought from the jaws of death to the joys of eternal life, where is mirth without mourning, riches without rust, &c.

But they shall be Priests] See the Note on Chap. 1. 6.

They shall raign] The righteous are Kings, Mat. 13. 17. compared with Luke 10. 24. Many righteous is the same with Many Kings. See the Note on ver. 4.

A thousand years] These thousand years begin (saith M. Brightman) where the former ended, that is in the year 1300. where by continuance thereof is promised for a thousand years forward, among some of the Gentiles; and how long it shall raign afterwards among the Jews, he only knows that knows all. The most Interpreters by a thousand years here understand not any definite time, as vers. 2. of this Chapter, but an indefinite time, that is for ever, as Psalm 84. 10. This thousand years they take for eternity, and a further degree of glory, for such as are called forth to suffer. See Ezek. 37. Isa. 26. 19.

Verse 7. Satan shall be loosed] i. e. Suffered to rise up in open rage against the open professours of the truth; and to make havock of them, as he did of the Waldenses, Hussites, Huguenots, Professours in Germany, Netherlands, Ireland, England, &c. He hath laid about him lately to purpose. Besides those seas of Christian blood shed by the Turk, since the thousand years expired.

Verse 8. Gog and Magog] That is Pope and Turk, saith Aretius; The Pope a covert enemy to Christ; The Turk an overt, or open enemy, as Gog, and Magog, signifie. These are set forth by Ezekiel, as the last enemies of Gods people before Shiloh came; and presently after their utter overthrow, the state of the City and Temple is notably described. So, after the Pope and Turk in that last great battle at Armageddon routed and foiled the new Jerusalem is in the following Chapters excellently pourtraied and depainted; that being a special type of this. Eezk. 38. & 35.

Verse 9. And they went up] As a flood, Ezek. 8. 9, 16.

And compassed] As resolved that none should escape them, Psalm 118. 11, 12. 2 Kings 6. 14, 15. & 35. 1.

The camp of the Saints] The Church militant.

And the beloved City] The new Jerusalem, Cap. 21. 2. The dearly beloved of Gods soul, Jer. 12. 7. or, Gods dearly beloved soul, as the Septuagint render it. For present, the Turk is the bridle that holds in the Pope with all his followers, from any universal proceeding against the Protestants; who herein are greatly advantaged above them, in that their opposites lie between them and the Turk; or in that their countreys coasting so much as they do toward the North (as Denmark, Swethland, &c.) are out of his way, and no part of his present aim. Italy is the mark he shoots at. And when once he shall rise against the true Church, fire from heaven shall devour him. ἡ φυλὴ τὴν ἡγαπημένην. Spec. Europ.

Verse 10. And the devil] This M. Brightman interprets of the Turk, called here the devil, because instigated and set a work by the devil. Albeit another learned Expositour is of opinion, that by the fall of the Beast and conversion of the Jews, the Turks and other States of the East shall be brought to embrace the Gospel, being first taught thereto by some notable foil. What to think of this I know not; but cannot but like well of Diodates note upon the fourth verse of this Chapter; that in all this prophecy it is better and more safe to expect and stay for the explication by the event, then to give it without any certain ground.

And

Βασανισθήσ. And ſhall be tormented] Gr. Racked; the devil and the damned have puniſhment without pity, miſery without mercy, ſorrow without ſuccour, crying without comfort, miſchief without meaſure, torments without end, and paſt imagination.

For ever and ever] This is as another hell in the midſt of hell, and forceth them to cry, οὐαὶ οὐαὶ Woe, woe, as if they ſhould ſay, οὐ ἀεί, οὐκ ἀεί, not ever, not ever, Lord. Whereto conſcience anſwereth as an eccho, ἀεί, ἀεί, ever, ever: Hence that doleful οὐαί, Woe and alas for evermore.

Verſe 11. And I ſaw a great white throne] A lively deſcription of the laſt Judgement, to ſhew that henceforth, ſince the laſt great battle, the new Jeruſalem ſhould have no diſturbance till Chriſt comes to judgement. His throne is ſaid to be white, for like reaſon as he is ſaid to ſit upon a White cloud, and a White horſe, chap. 14. & 19. He ſhall give moſt juſt and uncorrupt judgement.

From whoſe face the earth, &c.] To ſhew either his terribleneſs, or their renovation, 2 Pet. 3. 12. Rom. 8. 21.

Verſe 12. Small and great] It is the common opinion, that men ſhall riſe again in that tall and goodly ſtature of body wherein Adam was created: or at leaſt in that vigour of age that a perfect man is at about 33. years old, each in their proper ſex. And hereunto ſome think the Apoſtle alludeth, Epheſ. 4. 13. But M. Brightman holds, that in the reſurrection every one ſhall appear in that ſtature in which he departed out of this life, and that the contrary opinion doth manifeſtly contradict this Scripture, Ἐπίχω.

And the books were opened] The books of conſcience, ſaith Origen; of the Scriptures, ſaith Auguſtine: of both, ſay I; for according to Law written ſhall the Iudge paſs ſentence, the conſcience either accuſing, or excuſing.

Another book] That is, that of Gods decree of free grace; the book that hath our names in it, and our pardon.

The book of life] That Gods elect may be ſeen and known. God neither needeth nor uſeth books to judge by: but this is ſpoken after the manner of men. Mordecaies name was regiſtred in the Chronicles of Perſia. Tamerlane had always by him a Catalogue of his beſt ſervants, and their good deſerts, which he daily peruſed. Turk. hiſt. 227.

Verſe 13. And the ſea] Thoſe that periſhed in the waters, and thoſe whoſe aſhes were ſcattered upon the waters,, as Iohn Huſſes; whom after they had burnt, they beat his heart with their ſtaves, and caſt his aſhes into the river. But there is a ſubſtance of the Saints bodies preſerved, by a ſecret influence from Chriſt their head; and their duſt is precious.

Verſe 14. And death and hell] There ſhall be an utter end of all evils and enemies, nothing left to diſquiet the Church. She ſhall ſee them afar off, as Lazarus did the rich man, and be able to ſay of them, as ſhe did of her accuſers, Iohn 8. they are all gone.

Verſe 15. And whoſoever] As thoſe Prieſts were caſhiered that could not prove their pedegree, Ezra 2. 62, 63.

CHAP. XXI.

Verse 1. And I saw a new heaven]

NEw for form and ſtate, but the ſame as afore for matter and ſubſtance; as an old garment tranſlated is called a new one; and as who ſo is in Chriſt is a new creature.

Paſſed away] i. e. Were purged from their vanity and defilements.

And there was no more ſea] i. e. Trouble and tumult. The ſea is of it ſelf reſtleſs, and oft toſſed with ſtorms and tempeſts, Iſa. 57. 20. As for the element of water, it ſhall remain, probably, as earth, air, and fire do. Andreas thinks there ſhall be no more ſea.

Verſe 2. The holy City] The Church in glory, ſaith Diodate. The Church wayfaring and warfaring, ſaith Brightman, whoſe interpretation of this text, Nitur coniectura optabili magis quam opinabili, ſaith Pareus, is more to be wiſhed then imagined. The glory of Chriſts bride is fitter to be believed then poſſible to be diſcourſed, ſaith Proſper. The Italians have this proverb amongſt them, He that hath not ſeen Venice, believes not the bravery of it; and he that hath not lived ſome-while there, underſtandeth it not. This is much more true of Uranople, the new Ieruſalem. S. Iohns new Ieruſalem, and Ezechiels City, and Temple, from Chap. 40. to the end, are contemporary (ſay ſome) and ſignifie one and the ſame thing. Haſſenreffer.

As a bride adorned. &c.] Biſhop Ridley, the night before he ſuffered, invited his hoſteſs, and the reſt at Table, to his marriage; for, ſaid he, to morrow I muſt be married. Some other Martyrs went as merrily to die, as ever they did to dine.

Verſe 3. And I heard a great voice] To confirm the viſion, leſt it ſhould be thought a deluſion.

Behold the tabernacle] His ſpecial preſence both of grace and glory is with his elect. See Ezek. 37. 27, 28.

He will dwell with them] He will indwell in them, 2 Cor. 6. 16. See the Note there. The enjoyment of God is heaven it ſelf, therefore God is called heaven; I have ſinned againſt heaven.

Verſe 4. And God ſhall wipe away] As mothers do their childrens tears. Sorrow and ſighing ſhall flee away. Baca ſhall be turned into Berachah, ſighing into ſinging, miſery into majeſty: as Qu. Elizabeth was exalted from a priſoner to a Princeſs; and as our Henry 4. was crowned the very ſame day that, the year before, he had been baniſhed the Realm. Daniel.

No more death] For mortality ſhall be ſwallowed up of life.

Neither ſorrow] Properly for loſs of friends; for we ſhall inſeparably and everlaſtingly enjoy them. We ſhall ſit down with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, have communion with them; nor only as godly men, but as ſuch and ſuch godly men. And if with them, why not with others whom we have known and loved in the body? πένθος.

Nor crying] Qualis eſt in tragadiis, ſaith Aretius. κραυγὴ.

Nor any more pain Or, Hard labour for a livelyhood] to be gotten with the ſweat either of brow or brain. πόνος.

For the former things, &c.] The Latins call proſperous things Res ſecundas, becauſe they are to be had hereafter; they are not the firſt things.

Verſe 5. Write; for theſe words are faithful] Though few men will believe them; for if they did, what would they not do or forgo to get heaven? Cleombrotus reading Plato's book of the immortality of the ſoul, was ſo raviſhed with the conceit thereof, that he caſt himſelf headlong into the ſea. But how many reading this better book of heavens happineſs, are no whit wrought upon thereby, or in the leaſt meaſure moved to affect thoſe things, above, that run parallel with the life of God and line of eternity!

Verſe 6. It is done] As the puniſhment of the wicked, Chap. 16. 17. (See the Note there.) So the reward of the righteous is performed and accompliſhed.

I will give unto him] Whereas ſome good ſoul might ſay, I would it were once done. Have patience (ſaith God) I will ſhortly give unto him that is athirſt to drink of that torrent of pleaſure, that runs at my right hand, without any either let or loathing.

Ovid. Metam.

Cliterio quicunque ſitim de fonte levarit,

Of the water of life, freely] But merit-mongers will not have it freely: therefore they ſhall go without it. Cœlum gratis non accipiam, ſaith Vega.

Verſe 7. He that overcometh] Gr. He that is overcoming, or not yeelding, though he hath not yet overcome; If he but doing at it, and do not yeild up the bucklers.

Shall inherit all things] Tanquam heres ex aſſe. All Gods ſervants are ſons, and every ſon an heir.

Verſe 8. But the fearful] Cowardly recreants, white-livered milk-ſops, that pull in their horns for every pile of graſs that toucheth them, that are afraid of every new ſtep, ſaying as Cæſar at Rubicon, Tet we may go back; that follow Chriſt afar off, as Peter; that tremble after him, as the people did after Saul, 1 Sam. 13. 7. and the next news is, They were ſcattered from him, verſ. 11. Theſe lead the ring-dance of this rout of reprobates; and are ſo hated of Chriſt, that he will not imploy them ſo far as to break a pitcher, or to bear a torch, Iudg. 7.

And unbelieving] Therefore fearful, becauſe unbelieving; for faith fears no fray-bugs; but why do ye fear, ye ſmall-faiths? ſaith our Saviour.

Verſe 9. One of the ſeven Angels] The ſame, likely, that Chap. 17. 1. had ſhewed him the damnation of the Whore. So ſtudious and officious are the Angels to ſerve the Saints, Heb. 1. 14.

The Bride, the lambs Wife] Uxor fulget radiis mariti, ſaith the Civilian: ſo is it here.

Verſe 10. To a great and high mountain] As Moſes was caried up into mount Nebo that from thence he might view the promiſed land. He that would contemplate heaven, muſt ſoar aloft, flie an high pitch, &c. Take a turn with Chriſt in Mount Tabor, and be transfigured.

Verſe 11. Having the glory of God] Who putteth upno her his own comelineſs, Ezek. 16. as Rachel was decked with Iſaac's jewels.

Even like a Iaſper] And ſo, like God himſelf, who is ſet out by a Jaſper, Chap. 4. 3.

Clear as Chryſtal] There is no ſuch jaſper in nature as is thus clear; but ſuch an one muſt here be imagined. Nec Chriſtus, nec cœlum patitur hyperbolen. In ſpeaking of Chriſt or heaven it is hard to hyperbolize. Chriſts blood (the true Pactolus) ἐπὶ πλεῖστον, floweth with riches. Uranople (the new Ieruſalem) hath its foundation garniſhed with all manner of precious ſtones, to ſignifie as well the durableneſs as the excellency of it. See verſe 19, 20.

Verſe 12. And had a Wall] Far better then that of Babylon. Indeed this celeſtial China needs no wall to divide it from the Tartars: this is Arabia Fœlix, the people whereof live in ſecurity, and fear no enemy. They are in a far happier condition then the people of Tombutum in Africk, which are ſaid to ſpend their whole time in ſinging and dancing.

And had twelve gates] Thebes had an hundred gates, and was therefore called ἑκατόμπυλος, but nothing ſo well ſet and ſo commodious for paſſengers as this City with twelve gates.

Twelve Angels] As porters to let in, not as ſwordmen to keep out, as the Angel that ſtood Centinel at the porch of paradiſe, Gen. 3.

Verſe 13, On the Eaſt three gates] The Church is collected, and heaven filled from all quarters of the earth. Hence it is by one compared to the Samaritans Inn (πανδοχεῖον) becauſe it receiveth, and lodgeth all ſtrangers that come. In the Synagogue there was not lodging for all: the Ammonites and the Moabites were excluded the Congregation of Iſrael But Chriſt was born in an Inn, to ſignifie that in his Kingdom al may be entertained. He is called the ſecond Adam; the Greek letters of which name (as Cyprian noteth) do ſeverally ſignifie all the quarters of the earth. His garments were divided into four parts, becauſe out of what coaſt or part ſoever we come (ſaith a Divine) Chriſt hath garments to cloath us, and room to receive us. There are that have obſerved that the

the name of God in all the chief languages consisteth of four letters (as יהוה Θεὸς, Deus, Dieu, Gott &c.) to intimate that he hath his people in all the four quarters of the earth, out of all countries, nations and languages.

Ver. 24. And the wall] A wall the Church hath about it, & a well within it, v. 6. A garden enclosed is my sister, my spouse, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed, Cant. 4. 12. This wall of the Church hath twelve foundations, that is, Christ the only foundation, 1 Cor. 3. 11. laid by the twelve Apostles; In whose names also the sum of Christian faith is made up in those twelve Articles of the Creed. Discessuri ab invicem Apostoli normam prædicationis in commune constituunt, saith Cyprian. The Apostles being to be severed into several Countries to preach the Gospel, agreed upon this as the sum and substance of their Sermons. It was called Symbolum, a sign or badge, to distinguish Christians from unbelievers. Cyp. de symbol Apostol.

Had twelve foundations] Foundation is taken either for Christ, 1 Cor. 3. 11. Mat. 16. 16. or for the doctrine of the Apostles teaching salvation only by Jesus Christ, as Ephes. 2. 20. and here. The Papists have lately added twelve new Articles, raised out of the Councel of Trent, to be believed by as many as shall be saved; as above hath been noted.

Verse 15. Had a golden reed] Not those twelve Trent-Articles, or any humane invention, but the word, as Chap. 11. 1. where-with is measured not the Temple only as there, but the City, gates, and wall, as Ezek. 4.

Verse 16 And the City lieth foursquare] So was Babylon of old (as Herodotus describeth it) which yet was taken by Cyrus, Alexander, and sundry other enemies. Heaven also is taken, but by another kinde of violence then by force of arms. The solid square whereby it is here set forth, commends it to us; 1. For stable and unshaken, Immota manet, as it is said of Venice, which yet stands in the sea, and hath but one street that is not daily overflowed (the Venetian Motto is, Nec fluctu nec flatu movetur) 2. For such as looketh every way to the four corners of the earth, as Constantinople did; which is therefore said to be a City fatally founded to command. Herod. l. 1. Heb. 12. 28. Turk hist. 1153.

Twelve thousand furlongs] About 300. Dutch mile. Nineveh was nothing to this City for bigness; no more is Alcair, Scanderoon or Cambalu, which yet is said to be 28 miles in circuit, being the imperial seat of the great Cham of Tartary. Quinsay in the same Kingdom, is said to be of all Cities in the world the greatest: in circuit a hundred miles about, as Paulus Venetus writeth, who himself dwelt therin about the year 1260. But our new Jerusalem is far larger; 12000 furlongs (according to some) make 1500 miles; and yet he that shall imagine heaven to be no larger then so, shall be more worthy to be blamed then the work-men were that built Westminster-hall; which King William the second the founder, found great fault with, for being built too little; saying It was fitter for a Chamber, then for a Hall for a King of England: and therefore took a plot for one far more spacious to be added unto it. Ibid. 75. Dan. Chon.

Verse 17. An hundred twenty four Cubits] A Cubit is six handfuls.

That is of the Angel] That appeared as a man, but bigger and higher then ordinary; Now because this holy City is thus measured, and that with the measure of a man, Some think it to be of the Church militant. But some other passages in this and the following Chapters cannot be otherwise taken according to the letter, then of the state of full perfection. They do best in my opinion that take in both.

Verse 18. Was of Jasper] A stone of great worth and glory, the beauty whereof, saith one, it is easier to admire then to declare. It hath a variety of sweetness in it; such as none of the most cunning wits and sharpest eyes are able to distinguish. Heaven (we are sure) is such as eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, &c. Sermo non valet exprimere, experimento opus est. Words are too weak to utter its happiness; get to it once, and you will say so. Chrysost.

Pure gold] A mettal that shineth in the fire, wasteth not in the use, rusteth not with long lying, rotteth not though cast into brine or vinegar (as Pliny noteth) to shew that this City is incorruptible, invincible.

Like unto clear glass] Glistering gold, such as this world affords not. No not those two Islands in India called Chryse and Arger for the abundance of gold and silver there found, as Soline telleth us.

Verse 19. And the foundations] The Apostles and their faithful successours, who were puriores cœlo, saith Chrysostom, clearer then the sky, the very stars of the world, and flowers of the Churches, as Basil calleth them. The 12. Patriarchs have Exod. 28. each of them his precious stone inscribed with his name in the brest-plate of judgment: a symbol of the Church under the law. Levi hath the Chalcedony, Judah the Smaragd. But here in the foundation of the new Jerusalem, the Church under the Gospel, Levi hath the Smaragd, and Judah the Chalcedony, (The Tribes have their stones in Aarons brest-plate, according to their birth.) Our Saviours Chalcedony in Levi's place tels us (saith One) that he hath put an end to Legal sacrifices, and that he is both King and Priest of his Churches.

M. Sarson.

Verse 20. The fift Sardonyx] Search is here made through all the bowels of the earth for something of worth to shadow out the Saints happiness; which if it could be fully known (as it cannnot) it would be no strange thing or thank-worthy for the most horrible Belialist to become presently the holiest Saint, or the worlds greatest minion the most mortified man. He that desires to know the nature and vertues of these precious stones, may read Epiphanius, Philo, Franciscus, Rurus, and others De gemmis; Josephus also in the third book of his Jewish Antiquities. That was an odd conceit, and scarce worth relating, held by Anaxagoras, Cœlum ex lapidibus constare, & aliquando collapsurum, That heaven was made up of stones, and would one day fall upon mens heads. That other saying of his is much more memorable, when being asked, Wherefore he was born? He answered, Ut cœlum contempler, that I might busie my thoughts about heaven.

Laert.

Verse 21. And the twelve gates] i.e. Gate-keepers, Preachers of the righteousness that is by faith.

Were twelve pearls] All which do receive their lustre and worth from Christ that pearl of price, Mat. 13. like as the pearl by being oft beaten upon by the Sun-beams, becometh radiant as the Sun.

Was pure gold] Which no dirty dog may ever trample upon.

Verse 22. No temple] No need of external worships and ordinances; for they are all taught of God: they see his face, and hear his voice. Now we see but in part, because we prophecy but in part, 1 Cor. 13. They that understand it of the Church on earth, say, there is no Temple in opposition to the Jewish Temple, but a Gospel-Temple. But v 25. There shall be no night there, as here no Temple: now we shall not be above ordinances till above sin; which will not be in this world.

Verse 23. And the City had no need] He saith not there shall be no Sun or Moon, but there shall be no such need of them as is now; for the Lamb shall outshine them, shine they never so glorious, as they shall in that new heaven, Isa. 30. 26.

Verse 24. And the Nations] See Isa. 60. 3. and that he speaketh of the life to come, See ver. 11, 18, 19 21.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1185.

Do bring their glory] Despise and cast away all for heaven. Canutus set his crown upon the Crucifix; which, according to the course of those times, was held greatest devotion. K. Edw. 6. assured the Popish rebels of Devonshire, That he would rather lose his Crown then not maintain the Cause of God he had taken in hand to defend. Nazianzen rejoyced that he had something of value (viz. his Athenian learning) to part with for Christ, &c.

Ἀπλανῶς θεωρίαι.

Verse 25. For there shall be no no night there] And so no need to fear a sudden surprize by the enemy watching his opportunity. Their day above is a nightless day, as a Father cals it.

Verse 26. And they] i. e. The Kings, as ver. 24.

Verse 27. And there shall in no wise] Though the serpent could wind himself into paradise, yet no unclean person can come into this holy City. Tertullian called Pompeys theatre (which was the greatest ornament of old Rome) arcem omnium turpitudinum, the stie of all uncleanness. Heaven is none such.

CHAP. XXII.

Verse 1. A pure river]

NOt muddy as Nilus, but clear as Callirho. The alluſion ſeems to be to that earthly Paradiſe ſo well watered, Gen. 2. or elſe to Ezek 47. This river is Chriſt, Ioh 4. 14. and ſo is that tree of life, verſe 2. The ſecond Adam is a quickening ſpirit. Apollonius telleth us (lib. 3. Argonaut.) that in the Court of Æta King of Colchis were three fountains which flowed, one with milk, another with wine, and a third with honey. In heaven there is all this and more.

Verſe 2. In the midſt of the ſtreet of it] In medio foro ejus, where all may eaſily come by it; not kept with a ſtrong guard, as the apples of Alcinous, Heſperides, &c.

Twelve manner of fruits] Heavens happineſſes are ſo many that they cannot be numbred, ſo great that they cannot be meaſured, ſo copious that they cannot be defined, ſo precious that they cannot be valued.

Every moneth] Like the Lemmon tree which ever and anon ſendeth forth new Lemmons as ſoon as the former are fallen down with ripeneſs.

And the leaves] No want of any thing either for food or Phyſick. Ita balbutit nobiſcum Deus.

Verſe 3. And there ſhall be no more curſe] No caſting out by Excommunication: no cauſe of any ſuch thing.

Of God and of the Lamb] He and the Father are one, John 10. 30. See the Note there.

Verſe 4. And they ſhall ſee his face] How we ſhall ſee God, whether with our minds only, or with bodily eyes we ſhall behold his inviſible Majeſty in the glorious face of Ieſus Chriſt, there can nothing be determined.

And his name ſhall be] As ſervants of old had their maſters name branded in their fore-heads.

Verſe 5. And there ſhall be no night] See the Note on Chap. 21. 25.

For the Lord God] He that is Αυτόφως, Light eſſential.

Verſe 6. And he ſaid unto me] This is the concluſion of the whole prophecy: and it is very auguſt and majeſtical.

But none of all this can be ſaid of Gods word of truth, void of all inſincerity or falſehood. Invita Aureliani.

The Lord God of the holy Prophets] Some copies have it, The Lord God of the ſpirits of the Prophets. He is the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, but of the ſpirits of Prophets in a ſpecial manner; for thoſe holy men ſpake no otherwiſe then as they were acted or imbreathed by the holy Ghoſt, 2. Pet. 1. 21. Psal. 139. mend all. They sin of passion, and passions last not long. There is no way of wickedness in them, they make not a trade of it.

Verse 9. See thou do it not] See the Note on Chap. 19. 10. This was a flat prohibition, not a merry repulse; as Lorinus and Veigas the Iesuites would have it.

For I am thy fellow-servant] Wickliff disallowed the invocation of Saints and Angels, whom he called servants, not gods. For the word Knave which he used, signified in those days a servant, not as it doth in our days a wicked varlet, as his enemies maliciously intepret it: Bellarmine for one, a man utterly ignorant of the English tongue.

Verse 10. Seal not] Keep them not up for thine own proper use (as he did that wrote upon his writings, τὰ ἐς ἐμαυτὸν, things for my self) but freely impart them, and in such sort as that others may conceive and improve them.

For the time is at hand] And every days events shall explain the prophecy.

Verse 11. He that is unjust, &c.] q. d. Let things be fore-told never so plainly, and fall out never so accordingly, yet wicked men will be unconuertable, uncorrigible, Isa. 26. 10. But if an man be ignorant, let him be ignorant, 1 Cor. 14. 38. And he that is filthy, let him be filthy still] This is the last judgement we read of (befalling in this life) in all the new Testament. As that judgement of pining away in their iniquity (as if nothing could awake them) is the last that God mentioneth, Lev. 26. 39. after those dismal ones there threatned to befal the people. Tis contiguous, and as it were bordering upon hell it self.

Let him be righteous still] Let him persevere and proceed.

Verse 12. Behold, I come quickly] Therefore quicken you pace, bestir your selves lustily; your time is short, your task is long, your wages unconceivable.

Verse 13. I am Alpha and Omega] And am therefore worthy to be believed in my predictions of future events, which I can easily bring about and effect, sith to me all things are present.

Verse 14. That they may have right] That they may be assured of their interest in Christ and his kingdom. Plutarch tels of Eudoxus, that he would be willing to be burnt up by the Sun presently, so he might be admitted to come so near it, as to learn the nature of it. What then should not we be content to do or suffer for the enjoyment of Christ and heaven?

Διὰ τὸ αἰκολάστως καὶ δυσώδεις. Plut. Ἐλληνικ. De re rustica.

Verse 15. For without are dogs] In outer darkness. The Irish air will sooner brook a toad or snake to live therein, then heaven will brook a sinner. It was not permitted to a dog to enter into the Acropolis or tower at Athens, for his heat in Venery and ill savour, saith Plutarch. Goats likewise, saith Varro, come not there (unless for necessary sacrifice once a year) lest they should hurt the Olive. No filthy dogs or nasty goats get into heavens Tower, &c. The Panther, smels well among beasts (whom thereby she draweth about her) not so among men. God and the Saints loath what the wicked love, and delight in, as the Panther doth in mans excrements.

And Whosoever loveth] Though he make it not. Some will not coyn a false tale, that yet will spread it; these are equally guilty, and excluded Gods kingdom, Psal. 52. 3.

Verse 16. Have sent mine Angel] With weariness of flight, as Dan. 9. 21.

I am the root] That bear up David by my Deity: but am born of him in regard of my humanity.

Verse 17. And the spirit and bride] i. e. The bride sanctified and set awork by the Spirit, Rom. 8. 26.

And let him that heareth say, come] Abrupt sentences full of holy affection, q. d. Let him pray daily, Thy kingdom come.

Heu pietas ubi prisca! profana ô tempora! mundi
Fax! vesper! prope nox! ô mora! Christe veni.

M. Burroughes his last words were, I come, I come, I come: and so he gave up the ghost.

The Authour to the Reader.

WHen I first sent up some other of my Notes to the Press, I had no intent at all to publish, for present, this imperfect piece: But being since admonished by a Reverend Divine (who had the perusal of those unpolished papers of mine) that I had here and there referred thee, Reader, for further satisfaction, to my Common-places not yet extant; and therefore by him and others encouraged to send them abroad, for an Essay, as they were, I have done so as thou seest: And shall either go on, or give over here, as I finde my service accepted of the Saints. Mean-while, might I but obtain *S. Abstinence.

PROV. 23. 1, 2, 3.

When thou sittest to eat with a Ruler, consider diligently what is before thee:
And put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite.
Be not desirous of his dainties: for they are deceitful meat.

KIng Solomon having shewed in the last verse of the former Chapter, that diligence sets a man in the presence of Kings, as it had done Jeroboam in his presence, because he found him dexterous and diligent, handy, and meet for the work; he here directs such, when so preferd, how to behave themselves, if set at table especially; 1. To consider where to feed, vers. 1. for a man is forced many times amidst the variety of meats, wherewith great mens tables usually swear, to eat doubtfully (as one speaketh) not well knowing what piece to pitch upon, what dish to deal withall. 2. To put a knife to their throat, or, in their throat (as Aben-Ezra renders it) rather then offend by inordinate appetite. 3. If yet they finde themselves over-desirous of those dainties, to bridle themselves in by main force, to lord it over their lusts, not coveting the cates of a King, but being content with gruel rather, as Daniel and his three fellows, for the keeping of a good conscience.

This is ἐγκρά-τεια, Gal. 5. 23. from κράτος.

The often inculcating the duty imports; 1. A necessity, and that it must be done, or we are undone. 2. Difficulty, by reason of our strong inclination to intemperance; against which therefore keep we a strong guard, curbing and controuling the concupiscible faculty, about alimentary objects, restraining excess, both in meats (which is Abstinence strictly taken) and in drink, which properly is Sobriety, whereof hereafter in its place.

Doct.

Abstinence orders a man in the use of meats, that it be neither unseasonable for the time, nor unreasonable for the measure.

1. As

1. As touching the time. It is a fault not to observe due hours of eating. Eccles. 10. 16, 17. To fare deliciously every day, Luke 16. 19. To riot in the day time, 2 Pet. 2. 13. To feast, when God cals to fasting, Isa. 22. 12, 13. which is therefore called a day of restraint, Joel 2. 15. because we should then restrain our selves from all meat, if possible, for a season: that nature may be chastised, yet not disabled for duty; Or at least from bread of desires, as Daniel that man of desires, Dan. 9. 23. he ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in his mouth, &c. for three whole weeks together, because it went ill with the poor people of God. M. Rogers Martyr, in a hard time made a motion to forbear one meal a day. M. Wisheart, a Scotch-Martyr, fobare one meal in three, one day in four, for the most part, except something to comfort nature. God threatneth those that do not abstain in an evil time, Amos 6. 4, 7. And the Romans punished it in one that feasted and looked out at a window, with a garland on his head in the second Punick war.

Mat. 24. 38. τρώγοντες, eating, in the present tense, continually eating as brute beasts. Hinc νηστεία à privativa particula νὴ, & ἔδειν.

2. For the measure. 1. We may not neglect the body, defraud our Genius, macerate and unspirit our selves overmuch, as those Col. 2. 23. as Timothy, living among the luxurious Ephesians, 1 Tim. 5. 23. And as Nicolas Shetterden wife the Martyr, whom he chides in a letter to her for her excessive fasting, though of a pious intention. The merciful man doth good to his own soul; but he that is cruel, troubleth his own flesh, Prov. 11. 17. This latter clause Rabbi Levi expoundeth (and Mercer is of the same mind) to be meant of those that place the chief service of God in afflicting and pining their bodies, whereas bodily exercise profiteth little.

2. We may not pamper the body, cater for the flesh; preserve it we must, make provision for it we may not. Debters we are, to see to it, not to to live to it, Rom. 8. 12. We may not live to eat, but eat to live; less we must eat then nature desires, and yet so much as refresheth nature, and makes us fit for the service of God and man. Take heed to your selves, saith our Saviour to his Disciples (And who would have thought that they, who ordinarily fed upon barly-bread, and once had no better a Sundays-dinner then a few ears of corn, rub'd betwixt their hands, should need any such Take heed?) that your hearts be not over charged with surfetting, &c. and so that day come upon you unawares. But the Gospel teacheth to live soberly, or temperately, Tit. 2. 12. and reckons surfeting among the deeds of darkness, Rom. 13. 13. the works of wickedness, Gal. 5. 21. Such as are manifest to be unworthy of us; 1. As men. 2. as Christian men.

Reas. 1. As men we should be abstinent; it being the excellency of a man above a beast; an act of reason subduing lust; of the superiour faculties, repressing the inferiour sensualities. And, as in the iracible faculty, it is the glory of a man to pass by an indignity; and he is a braver man that can conquer his passions, as Iacob did in the rape of Dinah, then that conquereth a City, as his sons did the City of Shechem; So in the concupiscible faculty, it is an high praise To abstain from fleshly lusts which fight against the soul; to say to sensual appetite, and peremptorily to deny his carnal self, as David did in the water of the well of Bethlehem, and Alexander in his travels through the dry deserts of India. He was wont to say, That it was the basest thing in the world to play the Epicure; and had he held to that principle, he had been safe and happy. But when as a natural brute beast made to be taken, and destroyed, in what he knew naturally, he began to corrupt himself (as both S. Peter and S. Iude have it) he utterly perished in his own corruptions. So did the old world, those monstrous men of condition. They were τρώγοντες, saith. S. Matthew, Eating as brute beasts do, so the word signifies for (otherwise its no fault to eat) when the flood over-whelmed them. Whether it were lawful for them before the flood to eat flesh, the Doctours are divided, & determine not. But after the flood God said to Noah, and his sons, Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you. But mark that it is added, Even as the green herb have I given you all things, that is, soberly: & without curiosity to take such things as are at hand, as D. Willet interprets it. Nature also seems to teach the same thing in giving man so little a mouth, with a narrower throat, lesser belly then other creatures, as Chrysostom observeth; and in tying concupiscence to the stomack, and belly (the lowest place) as one would tie an horse and an ass to the manger, as Plato hath it. A fit resemblance and good enough for such beastly belly-gods as glut themselves with Gods good creatures which they devour, as if their throats were were whirl-pools, and their panches bottomless: crying out with the horse-leech, Give, give, stuffing themselves like wool-packs, and fatting themselves like boars, till they be brawned, and have (as Eliphaz speaketh) collops in their flanks. And whereas they should be (sith they will needs fall below the stirrop of reason) they should be, I say, like Ants and Bees, those wisest creatures, and abound rather in pectore ubi est animus, quam in ventre ubi est stercus, in breast then belly, they resemble rather the locusts which have but one gut, and the spider which is little else then belly. Of the Ass-fish Aristotle affirmeth, That of all other Creatures he hath his heart in his belly. And of the Dolphin Solinus observeth, That he hath his mouth almost in his very belly, and that he only (of all fishes) moveth his tongue. Such are our greedy-gut Cormorants; they wear their guts in their heads, and their brains in their bellies: they have a tongue also to talk for, and of their belly-timber, as that Roman Apicius, that wrote ten books of direction how to set forth a feast with all manner of dainties. This was laborious loss of time, as the Philosopher cals it: or as another, this was Magno conatu magnas nugas agere. Nature is content with a little, as not to be hungry, thirsty, cold, &c. saith Galen; grace with less. And that's the second thing we were saying.

2. As Christian men. Nothing more becometh us then Abstinence. A vertue that the very Heathens adored in their Socrates, Anacharsis, Cyrus, Cæsar, and others. The old Gauls were very sparing in their diet, and used to fine any one that out-grew his girdle. The Turks at this day (saith one) refuse all dainties for a piece of fat mutton. And when King Ferdinands Embassadours (that brought a great present to Solyman the great Turk) were feasted by the Bassaes, their cheer was only rice and mutton; and that so plainly and sparingly dressed (saith the Historian) as if they had thereby noted our gourmandise and excess, who measure not out chear by that which nature requireth, but that which greedy appetite desireth, as if therein consisted the greatest nobility. And the drink for the great Bassaes themselves, right easie to be had, was fair water out of the river Danubius, &c. Wine is a prohibited ware amongst them (saith my former Authour) which maketh some drink with scruple, others with danger. The baser sort, when taken drunk, are often bastinadoed on the bare feet. And I have seen some, after a fit of drunkenness, lie a whole night, crying and praying to Mahomet for intercession, that I could not sleep near them. So strong is conscience, even where the foundation is but imaginary. Now if these Gentiles, which have not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the law, and so shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness with or against them; Shall not the uncircumcision which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, judge thee, who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the law? Doth not that perfect law of liberty, the Gospel, teach men to do something singular? to walk exactly? to exceed Scribes and Pharisees, how much more Turks and Heathens? to eat before the Lord? to eat to the glory of God? to feed with fear of being ensnared by the creature? Which who so do not, these are spots and blemishes, saith S. Peter; spots and rocks in your love-feasts, saith S. Jude. Tertullian speaking of those love-feasts, testifieth, That great care was taken therein that none should eat or drink more then was meet, but that the poor should have their portion. Some, I confess, exceeded at Corinth, and are sharply taxed for it by S. Paul. 1 Cor 11. 21. But, for the general, they were modest and moderate: and are therefore said to be virgins (such as went not a whoring in their affections after the creature) and without blemish before the throne of God, Revel. 14. 4, 5. as those that did eat as in Gods presence, Deut. 12. 18. approving themselves to him even in their repasts and common conversation. Philo well observeth, that the ancient Jews used after their sacrifices to make their feasts; and in the temples, that the place and action might minde them of Abstinence and sobriety. Thus Jethro took a burnt offering, and sacrifices for God; and Aaron came, and all the Elders of Israel, to eat bread with Moses father in law before God. The Jews also had a sort of officers at their feasts called Præfecti morum, εἰνόμοι, to see that none should eat or drink too much; called they were also ὀφθαλμοὶ, the eyes of the feast, and in the Gospel Ἀρχιτρίκλινοι, Rulers of the feast, John 2. 1. And these, they say, were to be Priests, that with their gravity, and authority might over-awe the company, and see that there were no disorder. Now a good man, like a good Angel, is ever looking on the face of God: being (as Solomon adviseth) in his fear the whole day throughout. God, he knows well, is παντόφθαλμος, All-eye; Whe-whether therefore he eats or drinks, or whatsoever else he does, he does it as in the sight of God. Cave, spectat Cato, could never so keep in that Roman from surquedry, and indecency, as the sense of Gods presence doth the faithful Christian. He contents not himself with a natural use of his food (as bruit beasts, and brutish sensualists) but labours to tast the sweetness of God, in the sweetness of the creature. Besides, he looks upon his meats as a piece of Christs purchase, and sees them come swimming toward him in the dishes, as it were, in Christs blood. Himself also he considers, as bought with a price; and therefore resolves to glorifie God with his spirit, and with his body too, which are the Lords.

For Application. It is the saying of Hugo Cardinalis, that the devil hath two daughters, Covetousness, and luxury, or riotousness: the former he married of old to the Iews, the later to the Gentiles. But now the Popish Priests & Romish Clergy have taken them both from their husbands, and use them as their own. We read of one jolly Pope Julius, that called for his Pork-flesh (forbidden him by his Physicians) Al despito di Dio, in despite of God: and asked why, if God were so angry for an apple, he might not be as angry for his cold peacock which he missed at table, having commanded it to be set up for him against supper. Another of them (Leo the tenth) is said to have spent a thousand thousand crowns in one day at his coronation. The merchants of the earth are said to have waxed rich through the abundance of Romes delicacie, Revel. 18. 3. And the Kings of the earth, that had lived deliciously with her, are brought in bewailing her, verse 9. The merchants also mourn for that none now buy (as they were wont whiles Babel stood) their fine flower, and wheat, their beasts, sheep, and other viands. The fruits that thy soul lusted after, say they, are departed from thee (the Greek word signifies Autumn-fruit, their second services, suckets, sweet-meats, and delicate confections, wherewith the Roman Clergy refresh themselves even in their pretended fasts) and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee; and thou shalt finde them no more at all, vers. 14. Look how, when Sodom was sacked by Kedar-laomer and his company, it is expressly noted, That they took all their victuals, and went their way, Gen. 14. 11. So shall it be done to spiritual Sodom (so Rome is called, Revel. 11. 8. and fitly.) Sodomas sins were pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness. Not to speak of the first and last, who knows not that they (like the Cater-pillars of Egypt) do eat up the fat and best fruits of the land. For (saith he that made the Anatomy of the English Nunnery at Lisbon) what the purveyours of the Viceroy have forsaken in the market (as too dear) I have known the Cator of this house to buy at unreasonable rates, for their ghostly fathers table, and such of his chickens (the Nuns) as he most affected; whose greatest, and indeed only care is to prove skilful in the confection and dressing of such dainty cates as may best please their wanton palates. And (as Nutritiva facultas est officina generativa, Gluttony is the gallery that incontinency walks through) the same Anatomist sets forth a great deal of their fleshly filthiness. Elies sons had a wanton tooth, and this was an harbinger to other luxurious wantonness. Recte erit, cognate, &c. saith Lewis the 11. of France, in a letter to our Edward the 4. Thus it shall be with you, Cousen; If you'l but come over to Paris, wee'l pamper our flesh: and you shall delight your self in the choisest beauties of the City. After all which, I will bring you Cardinal Bourbon, who (according to the power committed unto him by the Pope) shall soon absolve you from all your sins. The Papacy is an alluring, tempting, bewitching Religion. S. Walter Rawleigh knew what he said, That were he to chuse a Religion for licentious liberty, and lasciviousness, he would chuse the Popish Religion. No sin past, but the Pope can pardon: No sin to come, but he can dispense with. No matter how long they have lived in any sin (though the sin against the holy Ghost) yet extream Unction at last will salve all. What marvel therefore, though Papists call for their portion here with the Prodigal, Eat and drink with the drunken, and begin to beat their fellows, with that evil servant, Mat. 24 49? Cry out with those Epicures in Isaiah, Come, I will fetch wine, and we will fill our selves with strong drink, and to morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant? let us eat and drink, for to morrow we shall die. Chrysostome tells us of some such in his time, as would usually say, Give me to day, and take thou to morrow. But of these Atheists well spake S. Austin, Many eat that here, that they must digest in hell. Hell was long since said by one to be paved with the shaven crowns of those hell-sprung locusts, That have, as it were, crowns on their heads (that is, vertices rasos, saith Parens) and a King over them (other locusts have none, Prov. 30. 27.) which is the Angel of the bottomless pit, whose name is Abaddon and Apollyon; or the Destroyer, Revel. 9. 7, 10. That son of perdition, to whom, though he draw thousands of souls to hell with him, none must dare to say, What dost thou? He hath thousands and ten thousands of these locusts ready prest for any service: therefore they are said to be like unto horses prepared unto battle, Revel. 9. 7. Pampered they are in their cloisters, as war-horses in their stalls or stables, Every one neighing after his neighbours wife, Jer. 5. 8. The husbands of barren women they send in pilgrimage to S. Joyce the Patroness of fruitfulness, and lie with their wives in the mean while. Marry they may not, though they burn like an oven, Hos. 7. 7. nor meddle with flesh on fasting-daies, though they make no bones of strange flesh any day. Are not these those seducing spirits S. Paul speaks of, that forbid to marry, and command to abstain from meats, 1 Tim. 4. 3? They twit us with their much fasting, as once the Pharisees did our Saviours Disciples: And shame not to say, that we count fasting but a moral temperance, a fasting from sin, a matter of policie. We could rejoyn and tell them, with more truth, that their fasts are meer mock-fasts and worse; whiles, 1. They abstain from certain meats only, not all; which is a Doctrine of Devils, 1 Tim. 4. 2. 3. The people they tie to bread and water; the Priests fill themselves the while with wine, sweetmeats and suckets. 2. In setting certain fasting daies under pain of damnation, whether the times be better or worse. 3. In making them a service to God, and yet consecrating them to the Saints. 4. In ascribing merit thereto. 5. In making shameful sale thereof. Their fasts also are oftentimes prefaces and pretexts to their abominable villanies, as in the Gun-powder-treason: They proclaimed a fast, with wicked Jezabel, for the success of the great crack and black-day, wherein these Harpies thought to have made but a break fast of us all. Now blessed be the Lord, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth, Psal. 124. 6. O that he would once at length put into the hearts of the Kings of the earth to hate the scarlet whore, and to eat her flesh, as it is prophesied, Rev. 17. 16. to destroy those crows-nests, the Monasteries and religious houses (as they call them) that they build no more there, as our Henry the eight did, turning out those slow-bellies here (as Zisca also did in Bohemia) the Abbey-lubbers I mean, that lived upon the spoil, having their souls meerly for salt to keep their bodies from putrifying. Their whole life was to eat and drink, and sleep, and sport, &c. as if they came into the world, as rats and mice, only to devour victuals, and to run squeaking up and down, as the Pharisees did to widows houses, which they devoured under a pretence of long praiers, Mat. 23. 13. Such as these are the vermine of the world, the body-lice of mankind, the excrements of humane society, &c. are therefore worthy of utter execration and ejection.

Let every servant of God count it a foul shame to be a slave to his palat. Epicurus (saith Ennius) whiles he looked too much to his palat, lookt not at all to the heavenly palace. Howbeit, if Ælian may be credited, Epicurus was wont to say, That if he might have but a morsel of meat, and a mouthful of water, he would hold himself as happy as the happiest. A strange speech from him that placed the chief happiness of a man in sensual pleasures. But whatever his opinions were, his life was temperate, saith Tully. Jacob (a far better man) desired no more but food to eat and clothes to put on, Gen. 28. 20. A little of the creature serves turn to carry us thorow our pilgrimage. If we have food and raiment, let us therewith be content, 1 Tim. 6. 8. Where note, saith a Greek Father, that he saith, having food, not fine fare, and raiment, not ornament. Meat and drink are the riches of a Christian, saith Hierom. Bread and cheese with the Gospel is good cheer, saith Greenham. It is but a little that a godly man stands in need of, saith Clemens Alexandrinus. If you'l be content to please Dionysius, you need not eat green herbs (said the Parasite to the Philosopher.) And if you'l be content (said the Philosopher to the Parasite) *to feed upon green herbs, you need not please Dionysius. with his cake on the coals, and cruse of water, then all Jezabels prophets with the murdering morsels they met with at her full Table. Our Saviour taught his Disciples to pray for bread (down-right brown bread) not bisket or manchet: and daily bread, or (as the Syriack hath it) bread of necessity, as Suidas, such as wherewith we may subsist, as Brentius, such as may hold life and soul together. And the wanton Israelites, not content with their bread from heaven, but lusting after quails, had their wish, but a curse withal. Not but that it is lawful to feast, to eat of the fat and drink of the sweet, and send portions to the poor as they did Neh. 8. 10. God hath allowed us not only for necessity or conveniency, but for honest affluence and delight, as Psal. 23. 5. Gen. 43. 34. Our Saviour himself was at feasts (as at the marriage at Cana in Galilee: and surely if feasting ever be in season it is at the recovery of the lost rib:) the people also were allowed to feast thrice a year before the Lord, and at every such time to please their appetite, Deut. 14. 26. Thou shalt bestow thy money for whatsoever thy heart desireth, &c. Yet, as the Egyptians carried about a deaths-head in their feasts to restrain their inordinate appetite: so it must be remembred, that the belly was the first sword that the Devil drew against us, and doth it still, and that, if thou let out thine appetite, it may cut thy throat. Be not therefore desirous of dainties: for they are deceitful meat. Eat such things as are set before you, as our Saviour bad his Disciples, Luke 10. 8. be it but homely, so it be wholsome. Luther (as he was a small meat man, and a great faster, so) for many daies together, saith Melanthon, I have observed him to content himself with a little piece of bread and a herring. Being often invited to feasts, he came not, lest he should lose so much time, as himself complaineth in a certain Epistle: I lose a great deal of time through invitations: And I know not what Satan procures it, that I cannot say nay, and yet it repents me to have done it. Be not amongst wine-bibbers, amongst riotous eaters of flesh, or flesh-mongers, as one rendereth it. For the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty, &c. Pro. 23. 20, 21. That is one motive to temperance;

1. Spend-thrifts entomb their ancestours in their bowels. As they turn rents into ruffs, and lands into laces, hang their patrimonies at their ears, as Seneca saith; wear a pretty grove, an indifferent farm on their backs: so do they waste their substance with riotous living, as that Prodigal, Luke 16. 13. Inglavies & tempestas, barathrumq; macelli. The Prodigal is called Ἀσωτος quasi Ἀσως & saith Clem. Alex. One that is unsaveable, or one that is undone by himself, saith Aristotle: So was Cleopatra, Heliogabulus, Vitellius, and (to omit many others) M. Livius, who when he had wasted a great estate in luxurious living, jested at his own folly, and said, That he left nothing for his heir, Præter cœlum & cœnum, more then air and mire. Another hearing that there were but 700. crowns left of a vast estate that he had left him, hanged himself. The belly is a troublesome client, saith one; an evil beast, saith another; an ingenious Artist, saith a third. What birds soever flie, what fishes soever swim, what beasts soever run about, are buried in our bellies (saith Seneca) what marvel then though we our selves are soon brought to burial? And let that be a second Motive to moderate feeding.

Motive 2.

2. Gluttony is the bane of the body. For many more perish by intemperance then by violence, by surfeting then by suffering. Epicures are as desparate as souldiers, and meat kills as many as the Musket. It is holden for certain, That in every two year there is such store of ill humours and excrements engendred in the best body, that a vessel of an hundred ounces will scarce contain them. What shall we then think of those greedy gully-guts that barrel up Gods good creatures in their bellies, and mast themselves like hogs of Epicures herd? How do they hasten their end, &, as it were, dig their own graves with their teeth? Plures pereunt crapulâ quam capulo, lancibus quam lanceis, &c. The board kills more then the sword: for life is a lamp: and excess of meat doth shorten the one, as too much oil doth extinguish the other. Let this warn our irregulares gulares, that make their gut a gulf, and fur their teeth with excessive eating, hateful to God, hurtful to themselves. Let them take heed that they hug not themselves to death; and, by pouring on too much oil, quite put forth the light of life. Tenuis mensa sanitatis mater, saith Chrysostom. Socrates is said by sobriety to have had alwaies a strong body: Gorgias and Warn the unruly.

Unruly perſons muſt be admoniſhed, rebuked, adviſed, reſtored to their right minds again, as the word here uſed importeth. For ſin maketh men ſots, Hoſ. 4. 11. mad-men, Eccleſ. 7. 25. quite beſides themſelves, as the Prodigal, Luke 15. 17. Ye which are ſpiritual, reſtore them therefore, Gal. 6. 1. rouſe them, 2 Pet. 1. 13. raiſe them out of the pit (you muſt his Aſs, much more his ſoul, Exod. 23. 5.) yea pull them out of the fire, as S. Jude hath it making a difference out of deep compaſſion. Or, as Lorinus reads and renders that text, Arguite diſputatos, by ſtrength of argument convince them of the errour of their way, and ſo reduce them by right reaſon. This is to pull them out of the fire of hell, ſaith Jude. This is to ſave a ſoul from death, ſaith James. This is a holy violence, a deſirable rapine, ſaith Hierom. And this is a duty that both Law and Goſpel call for. 1. The Law. Levit. 19 17. Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thy heart: thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour, and not ſuffer ſin upon him. 2. The Goſpel, Mat. 18. 15 Go tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he ſhall hear thee, thou haſt gained thy brother. Thou ſhalt rebuke thy neighbour, ſaith Moſes: and mark his reaſons.

Doct. 2. Miſereris, bonæ mentem in lite. raveris. Col. 3. 16 Amiſſam mentem reponite. Beza. ad mentem reſtituite. ἀνακτίζετε, aliàs ἀνακαινίζετε. Jam 5. 20. Volentia ſanctis, optabilis rapina.

For elſe, 1. Thou wilt hate him, which is man ſlaughter, 1 John 3. A ſeaſonable reproof draws out the poiſon of a beginning grudge and malice. Whereas not admoniſhing, breeds dwelling ſuſpitions: ſuſpitions breed a very habit of miſ-interpretation, miſ-interpretation begets a lothneſs to come to the light to ſhew the reaſons of diſlike: this lothneſs begets a very ſeparation in heart, and that, a forwardneſs to blaze this ſin. So ſome render the laſt clauſe in this Text, Thou ſhalt not lift up his ſin over him, or diſplay it as a banner to his diſgrace, as malice will make thee do. Others render it thus, That thou ſuffer not for his ſin: and that needs not; for thou haſt enough of thine own to anſwer for. But thou art bound, as to obſerve Gods Commandments in thy Reaſ. 1. Ne tamen ſuper eum peccatum tollas tanquam vexillum. Cirr. in Mat. 7. 1. Ne peccatum ejus tuum. Calv.

self, so to preserve them in others. Silence is consent by Gods Law, Levit. 5. 1. And by ill silence to leave men in sin, is as bad as by ill speech, to draw them to sin. Not to do good, saith our Saviour, is to do evil: and not to save is to destroy. Keep thy self from Mat. 3. 4. thine other mens sins, 1 Tim. 5. 2. Our Translators (after Tremellius and others) render it, Thou shalt not suffer sin upon him. Sin is so hateful a viper that we should club it down, and stub it up, where ever we meet with it. Now a man may hinder much sin by seasonable admonition; as Bradford kept Bishop Farrar (whiles he was prisoner in the Act. and Mon. fol. 1458. Kings-Bench) from receiving the Sacrament at Easter in one kinde, which he had promised to do: And Bishop Ridley (while he was prisoner in the Tower) from going to Ibid. 1930. Mass; which once he did. But M. Bradford being there also prisoner, and hearing thereof, reduced him by an effectuall letter. And as for those unruly ones that refuse to be reclaimed, yet the spirit of profaneness in them will be much laid by the majesty of a reproof, which will tame and take down their insolency, cut their combs, cool their courage; as Nicodemus did the Councels, Iohn 7. 51, 52, 53. And as Adrianus Boxschosius, Preacher of Antwerp did the Monks at Newburg, that railed at Luther out of the Pulpit. I (saith Boxschosius) am called by the noble Earl of Hoy to convince thee, and all thine of a lye. Tell me therefore, thou perverse Monk. and that openly before all this people, where, when, and in what points hath Luther erred? The Monk answered
Sculs. Annal. dec. as prima. not a word, but gat him privily out of the Pulpit, fled away as fast he could, and never came more into that countrey.

Reas. 2. Secondly, Our Saviour supplies us in that Mat. 18. 15. with another reason. If he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. Now to gain a soul is more then to get a world, as he hath assured us who best knew the worth of souls: for he, and he only went to the
Tit. 1. 13. price of them. Rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith, saith S. Paul of those slow-belly Cretians. The Church of Laodicea was sharply reproved, and thereupon soundly repented. For Eusebius commends it for a Church famous and flourishing in his days; which was well-nigh 300 years after. An admonition may not presently work: but afterwards (when men are in cool blood) it may be better considered of; Degrees of grace are not given all at once, Iohn. 13. 36. But the dispensation of the grace of God is given us to others ward, Ephes. 3. 2. that as every one hath received the gift even so should we minister the same one to another, as good stewards, out of the care of community. For as no man is born, so neither is he born anew for himself. The Rab-
1 Pet. 4. 10. bines have a saying, Lilmod lelammed, a man must therefore learn, that he may teach others. Ephraim that bore fruit to himself only, is called an empty vine. But the tongue
Grevitter Demosthenes Æschini, τὴν σὴν δεινότητος εἰς ὄνησιν ἤνεγκεν τῇ πατρίδι. of the wise is as the tree of life that feeds many. And how forcible are right words? saith he in Job. Nathan wrought more upon David by a particular private admonition, then all the lectures of the law for three quarters of a year before. Now if a brother be gained, a soul saved by a wise and loving admonition, who would not strive for such pearls?

Use 1. Reproof of such unruly ones as will not be warned; dogs, swine, scorners, asses that will not be brought home again, Exod. 23 4. but run further out. The more you rub their gald backs, the more they kick; the more you handle these toads, the more they swell; the more you meddle, the more will these serpents gather poison to vomit out at you. Say to wrest the strings of their tongues in tune, they will snap and break upon you; Cast water upon this lime, it will fry the faster. God hath threatned to lay such in the slimy valley, where are many already like them, and more shall come after them, Job. 21: 31, 32.

Use 2. Suffer the words of exhortation, Heb. 13. 22. Suffer it, nay pray for a friendly reprover, as David doth, Psal. 141. 5. And be thankful, as he was to Abigail; knowing that ye have cause to think and say as bad of your selves, as that worthy man Agur did, Prov. 30 2, 3. Hezekiah stormed not at Isaiah, but submitted. Iob laid his hand upon his mouth when reproved. Jonah replies not, but shuts up his prophecy, and lets God have the last word. The Virgin Mary when publikely checkt at the wedding, 2 Pet. 3. 15. Gal. 2. holds her peace, Iohn. 2. 4. S. Peter commends all. S. Pauls Epistles, who yet had sharply reproved him, and registred that reproof. I confess its no easie matter to bear an admonition well, though never so well tempered. No sugar can bereave a pill of its bitterness. It fares with offenders, as with those that are wakened out of sleep, they are unquiet, and ready to brawl with their best friends; Dogs in a chase will bark sometimes at their own masters. But as an ear-ring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold, so is a wise a wise reprover upon an obedient ear. Such shall finde more favour afterwards, then one that flattereth with his lips. Bees pass by roses and violets, to sit upon time: so godly men heed rather sound rebukes then smooth supparasitations. David esteemed better of Nathan after he had so plainly rebuked him, then ever he did before. See else 1 Kings, 1.23,27. Nay Augustus an Heathen prized plain-dealing in Mecænas and others. Epictetus called a faithful Monitour, a messenger from heaven. When Luther was one time very much moved at something, Melanchon interrupted and quieted him by repeating this verse,

Prov. 25. 12. Prov. 28. 13. Ἀνδρὶ νουθετοῦντι μὴ ποτε μέμψῃ. Dio in Augusto Mercurium a Deo missum, qui officii admoneat. Manli loc. com. p. 248.

Next to the not deserving a reproof, is the well-taking of it. The woman of Samaria loves Christ the better for finding her out in her sin. The two disciples going to Emaus constrain Christ to come in and eat with them, though he had roundly reproved them, being for ought they knew, a meer stranger, and one that had nothing to do with them. As young Eagles are known to be of the right kinde by their stedfast eying of the Sun; so, are the true children of the Church by the right bearing of reproof, James 1.19,20. Luke. 24.

Exhortation: Learn, and labour to be able, active and abundant in this Christian duty of admonition. The Romans were full of goodness, filled with knowledge, able to admonish one another, Rom. 15.14. The Hebrews are exhorted to exhort one another daily, Heb. 3.13. yea, to study one another, to stir up (or whet on) to love and good works. And the Colossians must teach and admonish one another, and that in the words of Christ dwelling richly in them, that out of the good treasure of the heart they may draw forth good things, new and old, as there is occasion Exhort one another with these words, saith Paul. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but reprove them rather, or refute, refel, convince them to be naught by the clear light of Gods Word. For all things that are (rightly) reproved, are made manifest by this light. Use 3. Heb. 10. 24. Col 3. 16. 1 Thes. 4. 18. ἐλέγχετε. Eph 5. 11, 13.

To quicken you hereunto, consider, 1. That God shall be greatly glorified. 2. Sin either restrained, or justly aggravated. 3. Weak Christians shall be kept from being scandalized, strong from being grieved. 4 Your selves hereby shall be both engaged to do that whereof you have admonished another, and comforted in the discharge of your duty; the omission whereof doth oft grieve the good heart, and vex the conscience: As it fell out in that faithful and famous man of God M. Sam. Hiron, whose words were these upon his death-bed, I confess that in publike I have been somewhat full in reproof, in admonition, in instruction. But in private my backwardness, my bashfulness, my dastardliness hath been intolerable: And I may truly say, that if any thing lies as a burden upon my conscience, this is it. Now for your direction, that old rule for matter of Alms, holds good in this of admonition, which is a species of spiritual Alms. A relation of the manner of M. Hirons death, annexed to the first volume of his works.

Est modus in dando, Quis, Quid, Cui, Quomodo, Quando.

Here then take notice: 1. Who must admonish. 2. For what. 3. Whom. 4. How 5. When. Rules to be observed in admonishing others.

First, Who must warn the unruly? All, without exception; the precept is general, Levit. 19. 17. Ezek. 18. 30. Turn ye, and turn others. Besides, we are all a kingdom of Priests, Rev. 1. 6. have all received an ointment, 1 John 2. 20. which must smell all Gods house over. Women must not preach, yet the elder must teach the younger to be sober, Tit. 3. Ministers must admonish of authority; all others of social charity; they that are spiritual especially, Gal. 6. 1. and children of light, Eph. 5 13.

Next, See whereof we must warn others, and for what reprove them. Not for soul sins only, and hainous offences, but for disorders, as here, and inordinate walking, 2 Thes. 3. 11. be it but idleness, talkativeness, pragmaticallness, censoriousness, &c. For, 1. Small motes in the Saints are made great beams by the wicked: their least aberrations (as of stars) is soon observed and noted. They watch for my halting, saith Jeremy; Make a man an offender for a word, saith Isaiah. 2. Lesser evils tolerated make way for greater. Cain not taking Gods reproof for frowns, fell afterwards to murder. Only let it be remembred that sins of infirmity must be more gently handled; as those of pride and presumption more sharply and with severity, Tit. 1. 15. Iude 22,23. When our Saviour (Samson like) drove those money-merchants out of his Fathers house with a scourge of small cords only, as he the Philistins once with the jaw-bone of an ass, he dealt more Isa 29:21.

more gently with thoſe that ſold doves. He poured not out their money, nor threw Joh. 1. 15, 16. down their tables, as he had done th e reſt, but gently ſaid unto them, Take theſe things hence, &c. He knew them belike not to be ſo great ſinners, he found them more tractable and eaſie to be wrought upon. Hence his different dealing.

Thirdly, Whom are we to admoniſh? 1. Not thoſe without the viſible Church, 1 Cor. 5. 11, 12. Reproof is a piece of Eccleſiaſtical government. 2. Not dogs and ſwine, Mat. 7. 6. mad dogs, ſenſual ſwine, that either grunt againſt goodneſs, or furiouſly flie in the face of ſuch as fairly tell them of their faults. Rebuke a ſcorner, and he Prov. 9. will hate thee: ſuch he means as have wearied themſelves ſo long in ſtanding and walking in wicked waies, that now they are ſet down at reſt in ſcorners chair, refuſing to be reformed, hating to be healed. Theſe are not worth the warning. But for all others, ſee that ye ſuffer not ſin upon them, for fear, favour, affection, or what other ſiniſter end ſoever. Only reprove equals with friendly admonition, ſuperiours with ſubmiſs exhortation, inferiours by ſharp reprehenſion, or (if need be) correction.

ἐπιπλήξῃς. Ne plagam inflige as verbera linguæ. Hor.

Ob. Rebuke not an elder, 1 Tim. 5. 1.

Sol. Not as a puny-boy (as the word ſignifies) but mildly, &c. elſe ſee v. 19, 20.

Ob. I love not to meddle. Be not many maſters, Jam. 3. 1.

Sol. No medling in this caſe is a kind of ſoul-murthering.

Ob. It is a thankleſs office.

Sol. Not with the wiſe, Prov. 9. 8. & 28. 23. In the ſweating-ſickneſs, they that were kept awake, eſcaped: but the ſickneſs was deadly to them that were ſuffered to ſleep. Let us keep one another awake: an unpleaſing work on both ſides. But ſuch ſhall have thanks one day.

Ob. I ſhall loſe my labour.

Sol. Venture that, thou haſt loſt many a worſe. See Job 6. 25. 1 Kin. 5. 11.

Ob. I ſhall loſe my friend.

Sol. It may be not. But ſay thou ſhouldeſt, thou ſhalt find a better thing. See Mar. 10. 29, 30. He that receives a curteſie, we ſay, ſels his liberty. But ſo did not our Saviour at Marthaes, at Simons houſe the leper; nor muſt we, but truſt God with all. A man had better offend all the world, then his own conſcience.

Fourthly, How muſt we admoniſh? Firſt, Zealouſly, ſo as the reproof may enter, the counſel be conſidered of, Prov. 17. 10. There is a curſe to thoſe that do this work of the Lord negligently, Jer. 48. 10. as Eli did in dealing with his lewd ſons: and Pope Paul the fifth, who being advertiſed of the deteſtable villanies of his ſon Farneſius, thought it ſufficient to ſay, He never learned theſe vices of his Father. How did S. Paul ſharp up the ſorcerer, Acts 13. 10. and our Saviour ſhake up his drouſie diſciples, Mar. 14. 41. though heavy-hearted! From henceforth ſleep and take your reſt, it is ſufficient. Three words he uſeth to upbraid them their ſleeping the third time, q. d. Sleep now if you can; the hour is come, the ſouldiers are at hand, &c. Next mildly, and in the ſpirit of meekneſs. Some warmth muſt be in a reproof, but it muſt not be ſcalding-hot, as by words of reproach, reviling, threatning, Monendo quam minando. Eliſha did more with a kiſs, then his man with a ſtaff. No oratory is ſo powerful as that of mildneſs. Ought ye not to walk in the fear of the Lord, becauſe of the reproach of the Heathen? ſaid Nehemiah, Who could reſiſt ſuch a ſweet and ſoveraign reprehenſion?

Hæc vitia me non commendatore didicit. Heyl. Geog. p. 223.

Acerbiſſimè ſarcaſmo eos perſtringit. Gil. 5. 1.

Laſtly, Learn when to admoniſh. Not when men are in their drink, 1 Sam. 25. 36. or in heat of paſſion, Prov. 18. 19. Good Phyſitians evacuate not the body in extremity of heat and cold; Marriners hoiſe not ſail in every wind. Opportunities muſt be watched. Samuel reproves not Iſrael, till ſure of their King. Conſider wiſely whether it may better be done preſently, and in hot blood, or more conveniently and profitably as another time, Eccl. 3. 7. Prov. 29. 11.

ALMS.

1 Tim. 6. 17, 18, 19.

Charge those that be rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, neither trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us all things richly to enjoy.

That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate.

Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation, against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.

Contented godliness is great gain. This is our Apostles proposition, in opposition to those men of corrupt minds, that even in those purer times, doubted not to defend, That gain was godliness, vers. 5, 6. But the love of money is the root of all evil. And they that will be rich, that are resolved to rake together —— rem, rem, quocunq; modo rem: These fall unavoidably into temptation, and a snare, yea (if they stop not the sooner, step not back the faster) into many foolish and noisome lusts, which desperately drown men in perdition and destruction, vers. 9, 10.

ἡ μυρίομα καρὲ στης ἐν τῶ εὐσεβείᾳ. ἡ φιλοχρημα-τία μητὴρ πάντων κακότητ☙ ἀνάστασις. βυθίζωσι, ita demergunt homines, ut in aquæ summitate rursus non ebulliant. Woverig.

This to prevent, the Apostle tasketh Timothy; 1. For himself to lay hold on eternal life, as fast as others do on this worlds goods; to follow after godliness as greedily as they after gain. 2. For others: after a short digression, he chargeth him to charge the rich in this world so to handle their thorns, that they prick not their fingers, pierce not their souls, gore not their consciences, either by pride (that hate of heaven, and gate to hell) or by carnal confidence, as if they were simply the safer, or better for their abundance: But contrariwise, 1. For God, to trust in him, for that he both lives and gives us all things, &c. 2. For men, to exercise bounty toward them. Whereof we have here, 1. A just description, by the matter, measure, manner, constant continuance, ver. 18.

2. A powerful incitation to the practise of it, drawn ab utili, which every man hearkneth after, ver. 19.

Charge them that are rich —— that they be rich in good works.

As God hath enlarged any man in his outward estate, he must be answerably enlarged in works of mercy (For that of this kind of good works the Apostle is here to be understood, it well appears by the context.) Doct.

The Scripture ranks all sorts into, 1. Rich. 2. Poor. 3. Men of a mean or middle condition, such as Agur wished for, Prov. 30. 8. Poor men are such as cannot comfortably subsist without relief. The middle man is he that gets and eats: his gettings and eatings are even at weeks end.

The rich man is he, that hath any thing over that size of satisfying nature: that hath any over-plus, any thing to lay up. Now the rule here is; Every man according to his ability must relieve his poor brother, as they did, Act. 11. 29. Yea, though we may not stretch beyond the staple, and so break all; yet in some extraordinary necessity, and exigency, the poor widdow must part with her little All; the Sareptan be no niggard of her oil, though it be in the bottom; the deep poverty of the Macedonians must abound unto the riches of their liberality, who to their power, and beyond it too, were willing thereto, 2 Cor. 8. 2, 3. The day-labourer must give somewhat out of his gets, the servant out of his wages, Ephes. 4. 28. The Ruler must not exact his right, Nehem. 5. 10. nor the landed man spare to sell that he hath, to give alms thereof, Luke 12. 33. as Barnabas (and others) did, Acts 4. 37. and was therefore called A son of consolation, because he thereby comforted Gods poor afflicted. Holy Bradford, in a hard time, thought not much to sell his chains, rings, and jewels, for relief of others. Rogers our Protomartyr in Queen Maries daies, made a motion to forbear one meal a day. Mr. George Wisheart a Scotch Martyr forbare one meal in three, one day in four, for the most part, except something to comfort nature. He lay hard upon a pouffe of straw, with course new canvasse sheets, which whenever he changed, he gave away. Giles of Brussels Martyr, gave to the poor all that he had that necessity could spare: and only lived by his science, which was of a Cutler. Some he refreshed with his meat, some with clothing: to some he gave his shoes, some he helped with houshold-stuff: to other-some he ministred wholsom exhortation of good doctrine. One poor woman there was brought to bed, and had no bed to lie in: to whom he brought his own bed, himself content to lie in the straw. Being taken, and put in prison, he ministred to all his fellow-prisoners at table, being contented himself with a few scraps that they left, &c. Dr. Taylour Martyr, made it his custom, once in a fornight at least to call upon Sr. Henry Doyle, and other of the rich Cloth-makers in his Parish to go with him to the Alms-house, and there to see how the poor lived, what they lacked in meat, drink, clothing, bedding, or any other necessaries. The like did he also to other poor men that had many children, or were sick. Then would he exhort, and comfort them: and, where he found cause, rebuke the unruly (this was spiritual alms) and what they lacked, that gave he after his power; and what he was not able, he caused the rich to minister unto them. Mr. Fox (that reports all the former) never denied any one that asked him ought for Jesus sake: And being once asked, Whether he knew a certain poor man, that had received succour from him in time of trouble he answered, I remember him well: I tell you, I forget Lords and Ladies to remember such. Twice I was (saith the same Mr. Fox) in Bishop Hoopers house at Worcester: Where, in his common-hall, I saw a table spread with good store of meat, and beset full of beggars and poor folk. And I asking his servants what this meant, they told me, that every day their Lord and masters manner was, to have customably to dinner a certain number of poor folk of the said City by course, who were served by four at a mess with wholsom meats. And when they were served, being before examined by him or his deputies, of the Lords-praier, the Articles of the faith, and ten Commandments, then he himself sat down to dinner, and not before: being as it is elsewhere storied of him, Spare of diet, sparer of words, spareſt of time. Amadeus Duke of Savoy (afterwards made Pope of Rome, anno 1440.) being asked by certain Embassadours, whether he had any hunting dogs to shew them, told them they should see them the next day. And getting together a great sort of poor folk he set them with him at his own Table on the morrow, and said to the Embassadours, These be the dogs that I keep daily, and wherewith I use to hunt after heaven. A like course was taken by Charls the great, and by Ingo King of Draves and Venedi, as Æneas Sylvius reporteth. Of a certain Bishop of Lincoln it is said, That he never thought he had that thing, that he did not give. The same is reported of our General Norrice: and before them both of Cyrus the King, and of Antonius the Emperour.

Queen

Digitized by Google

Queen Anne Bullen carried ever about her a little purse for the poor; thinking no day well spent, wherein some man had not fared the better by some benefit at her hand. She kept her maids, and such as were about her, so employed in sowing and working garments for the poor, that neither was there seen any idleness then among them, nor any leisure to follow foolish pastimes. So did Dorcas before her, and so before them both Bathsheba, or the good housewife that she commends to her son Solomon, She laieth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff Prov. 31 19. But why this? And what need she be so work brittle, being a Queen? It followeth in the next words, v. 20. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor, yea she reacheth forth her hands to the needy. She was of his mind, belike, that said (and suffered for so saying in King Henry the 8 daies) That alms should not be given until it sweat in a mans hand Mr. Bradford Martyr, counted that hour lost, wherein he did not some good with his tongue, pen or purse. The young Lord Harrington gave the tenth of his allowance (which was a thousand pounds a year, during his minority) to the poor and other good uses (as appeared by his accounts after his death) besides what he gave in the way as he walked and travelled, which he did often and much, &c. M. Whately also that late painful and powerful Preacher of Gods Word at Banbury, as he was much in pressing this duty of liberality, so himself abounded in works of mercy. He set apart and expended for the space of many years for good uses, the tenth part of his yearly comings in, both out of his temporal and Ecclesiastical means of maintenance. Neither may I here forget that late reverend man of God Mr John Ballam Pastour of the Church at Evesham (my spiritual father, and bountiful benefactor) nor yet M. Simon Trappe, late Minister of Gods Word at Stratford upon Avon, my dear and near kinsman, both in the flesh, and in the faith. Both which, out of that little they had (for God saw fit to hold them here to strait allowance, who deserved a larger proportion: but a rich stone is of no less worth when locked up in a wicker casket, then when set in a Bishops mitre) they laid up by them weekly in store somewhat for the poor, of that their little: and they were no losers by it. The poor mans box is Christs treasury (saith a Father.) And he sits by, as an Arch-deacon, to see what every man casts into this treasury, and with what affection. The people, Mark 12. 41. cast in money (brass money, saith the Original:) somewhat they must do, for none might appear empty-handed before the Lord; but they would do as little as might be: they cast in, saith the Text not silver or gold but brass-money into the treasury. And many that were rich cast in much But the poor widdow cast in more then all the rest, saith our Saviour: less in Arithmetical proportion, but more in Geometrical, because all she had. And women are noted for more hard and tenacious then men; whence it is that the joy for finding the lost groat is propounded in the person of a woman, Luke 15. But this was a widdow indeed, trusting in God, as S. Paul describeth such, in the living God, as this Text hath it, who giveth us all things richly to enjoy. This is one part of Gods charge here: and another is, to be rich in good works, ready to distribute, &c.

And that is our first reason (for we need not travel out of the Text to fetch in reasons for the point in proof) God laies his charge, his solemn charge upon us, to be much in works of mercy. Now if God should charge the rocks, they would send forth water: if the stones, they would become bread: if the ravens, they would feed Elias: if the quails they would victual the camp; if the clouds, they would rain down food from heaven upon his poor people. Shall we then be more rocky then rocks? more stony then stones? more ravenous then ravens? more senseless then birds? more empty then clouds?

Secondly, They are but the rich in this world, that are here required to be rich in good works. Its one thing to be rich in this world, and another thing to be rich towards God, as our Saviour phraseth it, to be rich in knowledge, as S. Paul hath it, rich in faith, as S. James. This is to be rich for another world, to lay up a treasure in heaven, to make us purses that perish not. Sell that ye have, and give alms, provide you baggs thereby that wax not old, that are never the worse for wearing, treasure in heaven that faileth not: but the more you take from it, the more you add to it; It grows in your hands as the loaves did in our Saviours, as the oil did in the widdows cruse, as the water doth in a well-spring. That which a man eats, drinks, wears, builds, &c. tends but ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι. Finem habitura sunt hæc omnia aut suum aut tuum. but to a natural life, the world that now is (as the Text hath it) and ends with it too. These things are only for this place, and for this state too; terrene they are and abject, base and bootless, vain and vile subject to vanity or violence, for the moth may consume them, or the thief steal them. But if not, yet they serve but to back and belly, to prop up this life present; Which yet they cannot. For, Meat is for the belly, and the belly for meats; But God will destroy both it and them. Were it not better therefore by bounty to the poor to make us friends with the unrighteous mammon, that when we shall be turned out (as it were with a firme ejectione) of our clay tie cottages they (that is either the Angels, or thy riches, or the poor whom therewith thou hast relieved) may receive us into everlasting habitations! that when these things fail us (as they will, for they are only this worlds goods, as S. John calleth them, and will follow their right masters, as dogs do, when company parts) our good works may follow us, and speak a good word for us at Gods dreadful tribunal.

Reas. 3. Thirdly, To be rich in good works is a special preservative, a soveraign Antidote against those two dangerous diseases (connatural and almost inseparable from the rich in this world) 1. Highmindedness, causing men to think great things of themselves, and to seek great things for themselves. This is a blab that the Devil will easily blow up in rich misers; to think themselves simply the better men, because richer then others, which is all one, as if the silly Ant, the higher she gets upon her hillock, the greater she should conceit her self.

2. Carnal confidence in the wedge of gold, in their heaps and hoards of the wealth of this world, making their gold their God, and trusting to their idol, which the belly-god doth not, who yet hath damnation for his end. Every niggard draws arguments from his riches to prop up his hopes, to confirm his expectation of a longer and more comfortable life, because of his much good laid up in store for many years. Now this is so ordinary a thing for those that are rich in this world, to trust in uncertain riches, that when the Disciples were astonished at that saying of our Saviour, How hardly shall the rich enter into heaven? and he, for their satisfaction had thus explained himself, Children, How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the Kingdom of God? It is easier for a Camel, &c. They were so far from being satisfied, that they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, Who then can be saved? as knowing that there were scarce any rich, but trusted in their riches. For prevention whereof, and that the rich dash not against either of these two dangers, Charge them, as they love their lives, and would save their souls, to be rich in good works. This kept David humble, 1 Chron. 29. 14. And would have kept that rich young Pharisee from trusting to his great possessions, had he taken our Saviours councel, Mark 10. 21, 22. But his heart was so wedded and wedged to his wealth that he went away grieved at that hard saying, Sell all and give to the poor, as one well beaten: and seemed to be of that misers mind, that being on his death-bed, clapt a piece of gold in his mouth, and kept it there; and being asked his reason, he answered; Some wiser then some: this I mean to keep till I am dead.

Fourthly, Riches are a meer uncertainty, an obscurity, a fallacy: one while they appear, and another while they disappear, as meteors in the air, as dive-dappers in the water: as a flock of birds in a mans field: he cannot say they are his, because they sit there, For they take unto them wings, saith Solomon, and flee away. Instance Job; to day on the throne, to morrow on the dung-hill: Pythias pined to death for lack of bread, who once was able to entertain and maintain Xerxes his whole Army: Bajazet, that ball of fortune, as one calls him, or rather an example of wealths uncertainty, as another. Now in dealing with things uncertain (whereof there is no hold) a wise man will be careful, 1. To make them as sure as he can. 2. To use them as well as he can, while he hath them. But neither can we assure riches, nor use them better then by bestowing them on the poor. If this be not done, all conveyances of law are but meer toies, so are all other carnal securities. Shalt thou raign because thou closest thy self in Cedar? saith God to Coniah. Did not thy father eat and drink and do judgement, and then it was well with him? He judged the cause of the poor and need, then it was well with him. He that gives to the poor, lends to the Lord, becomes creditor to his Creator, and he will repay it. Christ speaks to such from heaven, as once Paul did to Philemon: If my poor have received any thing from thee, or oweth thee ought, I the Lord Christ have Writ ten it with mine own hand, I will repray it. And can we lay up our wealth in a safer hand? Can we have a better debter then Christ? a better bond then the Bible?

Fifthly, This shall be a good argument and approof unto us, that we trust in the living God (which is the character of a true Christian, and is therefore pind as a badge upon the sleeve of every godly person) that we receive his charge, lay hold on his Covenant, believe his promises, that we have first given our selves to God, with those merciful Macedonians. 2 Cor. 8. 5. and then our goods to the Saints, that are in the earth: th se excellent ones, in whom was all Davids delight, Psal. 16. 3. Thus Obdiah, Thy servant feareth God, said he to the Prophet; but how shall that appear, Obadiah? Why? when Iezabel persecuted the Lords Prophets, I hid them, and fed them by fifty in a cave, not without the hazard of my head if ever it should have been noticed. So Isa. 23, 18. The City of Tyrus turning to God, leaves heaping and hoarding her wealth, and findes another manner of imployment for it, viz. to feed and cloath Gods poor people. So Zacheus converted, gives half he had to the poor: and Cornelius shews his devotion, the Corinthians their professed subjection to the Gospel, 2 Cor. 9. 13. by giving much alms to many people. The wisdom from above is full of mercy and good fruits, saith S. James. And, Pure religion and undefiled before God and the father is this, to visit the fatherless and widdows, &c. to do all offices of mercy to those that are poor and in misery.

Sixthly, We should therefore be rich in good works, because God, 1. Lives, when we are dead, to recompense our labour of love in our heirs and executours. He gives us life also, that whiles we have time, we may do good to all, to the household of faith especially: and not defer the doing thereof til we are dead. Many miserly muck-worms are like the muck-hill, that never does good till carried out; like the fat hog that is good for nothing, till he comes to the knife; like the poor mans box, that yields no money till broken up: like trees that let fall none of their fruits, till violently shaken. We are charged to carry lights in our hands: funeral beneficence carries them behind our backs; so that they light them that come after us; our selves have little benefit. 2. Because God gives us all things richly to enjoy. Every word enwraps a reason.

1. He gives, not pays us as earned or merited. Freely we receive, freely therefore we must give; especially since it is a more blessed thing to give then to receive; and besides, for this we have received that we may give; sith we are not owners of what we have, but Almoners, Stewards, purse-bearers to the King of heaven.

2. He giveth us, who have little reason to look for it, sith we look for heaven, and may therefore well live upon revertions. This made Abraham content to dwel in tents, because he looked for a City, whose maker and founder is God. The wicked are called the Inhabitants of the earth, and have their portion in this world; by their good wils the godly should have nothing. And truly, if they should here both hunger and thirst, and be naked and buffeted, and have no certain dwelling, but wander about in sheepskins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented, their betters have met with as bad measure, and were glad of it too, because through manifold tribulations they entred into heaven. But to step out of one heaven into another, to have here all things richly to enjoy, and afterwards to enjoy that endless joy, this is hard and happy. Why should such think much to part with a little pelf at Gods appointment?

3. He giveth us all things; What so great matter is it then that we give him back something? especially since we give him but of his own, as David gladly acknowledgeth. Is it not meet that we should give him one day in seven? sith the day is his, the night also is his, as the Psalmist hath it. So also here.

Psalm 74. 16. Prov. 13, 25. Psalm 23. 4.

4. He giveth us all things richly, not sparingly, pinchingly: not for bare necessity only, but for delight and satiety; neither for competence and convenience only, but honest affluence (as he did them at Cana in Galilee, and the five hundred he fed with a few loaves and fishes) so that we eat to the satisfaction of our souls, Prov. 13. 25. and our cups run over with Davids. And why run over, but that they may run into other mens emptier vessels? that the poor may partake of our redundancies? For is it fit that some should be hungry in Gods house, and others drunken, as once at Corinth? And not rather that our abundance should be a supply for others wants, that there may be an equality? 2 Cor. 8. 14.

5. He giveth us all things richly, and this to enjoy: not to hoard, much leſs to waſte; but to bleſs God in the abundance of all things, and to bleſs men with our ſuperfluities at leaſt; that their backs, bellies, bowels, which we have refreſhed, may bleſs us; that whiles they enjoy our bounty, we may enjoy their prayers, as Oneſiphorus did S. Pauls, 2 Tim. 1. 18. and God may have their praiſes, whiles they cry out as S. Paul brings them in, 2 Cor. 9. 15. Thanks be to God for his unſpeakable gift. That like good ſtomachs we may deal ſomething to the remoteſt members, that they may the better do their office; and that ſitting at the upper end of the Table, and having eat well to our ſelves, we may ſet down ſome to them that ſit below, that they may eat and be ſatisfied; and praiſe the maſter of the feaſt. And this is the ſixt Reaſon.

Reaſ. 7.

Laſtly, If rich men look after commodity (as who doth not? All gape after gain, and will do much for it) they may by their liberality, 1. Lay up in ſtore, or lay aſide far from thieves, hide out of harms-way, hoard and treaſure up, which rich men love alife to be doing. 2. For themſelves; and they are commonly all for themſelves; but this alſo is for the ſoul, the better part of themſelves. The body is but a rag of themſelves, and muſt ſhortly be tumbled into the duſt. 3. A good foundation fit to bear up, when riches will fail them. Heaven only hath a foundation, Heb. 11. 10. Earth hath none, Job 26. 7. and things are often ſaid to be in heaven, but on earth; on the ſurface only, ready to ſlide off, or ſlip beſide. 4 And for the time to come. This is ſpoken in oppoſition (likely) to that fore-mentioned uncertainty of riches. By mercy to the poor, Ye ſhall lay up much goods for many years, obtain a lengthening of your tranquillity, yea provide for your own well-doing a thouſand year hence. 5. They ſhall hereby lay hold on eternal life; and is not that worth having? O do not men know what a place heaven is? The pavement is of gold, the wals of pearl, &c. I do but diſgrace it, by ſeeking to deſcribe it. Rich men have a price in their hands, where with to purchaſe it, had they but hearts to make uſe of it. Neither are the pooreſt excluded, diſabled: Heaven may be had for a cup of cold water, if rightly given, ſaith Auſtin; for a morſel of bread, ſaith Chryſologus. It is fabled of Midas, that whatſoever he touched was turned into gold. Sure it is, That whatever the hand of charity toucheth, though it be but a cup of cold water, it turns it not into gold, but into heaven; where, The Almighty ſhall be thy gold, and thou ſhalt have ſilver of ſtrength. Yea, Thou ſhalt lay up gold as duſt, and the gold of Ophir as the ſtones of the brooks, Job 22. 24, 25.

For Application. How fitly might we here take up the old complaint, and ſay There is no mercy in the land! Hoſ. 4. 1. Merciful men are taken away, Iſa. 57. 1. The love of many is waxen cold, Mat. 24. 12. Elias lacketh his hoſteſs of Sarepta, Eliſha the Shunamite. Paul cannot finde the Purpuriſs, nor Peter the Tanner. Iob we have not, and Obadiah we finde not. Captain Cornelius is a black ſwan, and good Oneſiphorus not to be heard of. Moſt men have ſhut up their bowels, yea buried them aforehand: their hearts are hardened, their hands withered. Mouth-mercy there is good ſtore, as once in S. Jawes his days, Go and be warmed, fed, cloathed; But with what? with a fire, feaſt, ſuit of words. But a little handfull were more worth then a many of theſe mouth-fuls. Words are good cheap: but were their bleſſing worth a half-penny (as the beggar told the Cardinal) they would be adviſed how they parted with it. Children though they have their mouths full and hands full, yet will rather ſpoil all then give any away. So is it now adays, The richer they are, the harder, as Dives, whom to upbraid, Lazarus was laid in the boſom of Abraham. Look how the Moon, the fuller ſhe is of light, the farther off the Sun ſhe gets: And as the Sun moveth ſloweſt when he is higheſt in the Zodiack: ſo are thoſe ſloweſt to give, for moſt part, that are higheſt in eſtate. And that they may not ſeem to ſin without ſenſe, to be mad without reaſon, ſome ſorry ſhifts they have gotten together, whereby to defend themſelves from the danger of liberality. All or moſt of which are excellently anſwered by Solomon, Eccleſ. 11. 1. to 7. off their varnish with rivers of brimstone. They commonly pass for good honest men, but somewhat of the hardest, good husbands, near themselves. But God cals and counts niggards no better then Atheists, because they provide not for a better life, but make their gold their God; Hypocrites, because they make not conscience of obeying every one of Gods charges, as well as any one; this, as well as the rest; Thieves, for with-holding good from the owners thereof, Prov. 3. 17. that is from the poor that are interested in their goods, and for whom they are entrusted; Murtherers, lastly; for not to do good is to do evil, not to save is to destroy, as our Saviour intimateth, Luke 6. 9.

This is their sin: and for their punishment, Men shall curse them in their prosperity, and not pitty them in their adversity. God shall set off all hearts from them, as he did from Haman that mercilesse man, who had none to intercede for him, in his distresse, none to speak a good word for him, or to him. Next. Charge we all our several selves with this most needful, but much neglected duty here charged upon us in the Text: where we have something for our Direction, and something for our Incitation. That which the Apostle here directs us, is, That, 1. For the matter, first, We do good works. 2. For the measure, That we be rich in good works. 3. For the manner, That we be ready to distribute. 4. For the continuance, That we be yet further willing to communicate, that we wax not weary of well-doing; but, more perennis aqua, as a spring runs after it hath run, so should we give, after we have given, and be still doing good to others, as we have opportunity and ability.

Rules of direction for alms-deeds.

First then for the matter of our bounty, it must be good that we do. Here, 1. It must be well gotten that we give; for as God hates bribery for a burnt-offering, Isa. 61. 8. so robbery for a work of mercy, Mat. 6. 1. whereas our Saviour saith, Take heed that you do not your A L M S before men, the Syriack Translator renders it, Take heed that you do not your justice, or righteousnesse before men; to teach that Alms should be of things well gotten. And to this purpose, the Jews called their Alms-box Kupha shelsedachah, the chest of justice: And they expound that saying of Solomon, Prov. 10. 2. Treasures of wickednesse profit nothing; but righteousnesse delivereth from death. Righteousnesse, that is Alms, say they. And thereunto they accommodate and connect the next verse also; The Lord will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish; no though he should give all his goods to the poor, but he casteth away the substance of the wicked, wherewith he thinks to make amends for his oppressions, and to set off, by his good deeds, for his bad. Selymus the great Turk could see this by the dim light of corrupt nature. For, when he was upon his death-bed moved by Pyrrhus (that great Bashaw) to bestow that abundance of wealth that he had wrongfully taken from the Persian Merchants, upon some notable Hospital, for relief of the poor; he commanded it rather to be restored to the right owners; which was forthwith done accordingly. He would not offer ex rapina holocaustum, as too many do amongst us, to the shame of Christianity. When Henry the third King of England hath sent a load of freeze to the Frier-minors to cloath them, they returned the same, with this message, That he ought not to give alms of that he had rent from the poor, neither would they accept of that abominable gift. How much less then will the righteous God?

2. To the making of alms a good work, it must be right, both quoad fontem, and quoad finem too.

The rise and principle of our liberality, the fountain whence it flows, must be, 1. Faith in God, that he doth both accept our persons, as Abel; and will receive an offering at our hand, as David's; without this faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11. 6. 2. Love to our brethren, Bowels of mercy yerning over the needy, considering the poor weakling (whose health is spent, and wealth wasted) and deeply commiserating him. This is to love mercy, Micah 6. 8. to draw out thy soul to the hungry, Isa. 58. 10. thy soul, and not thy cheat only, thy bowels, and not only thy bread. Bowels have no singular number in the Hebrew and the Greek tongue, to teach us that we must be much in works of mercy, and do them all out of deep and dear pitty and sympathy. They that have pourtraied charity, have drawn her out as a naked childe with a merry countenance, covered in a cloud, with a bloudy heart in the right hand, giving honey to a Bee without wings.

Hier. Wolf. in Tiliani tab. philoſoph. Mat. 18. 2. 1 Cor. 13. 5. 2 Cor. 9. 7. Mat 6. 7. Pſal. 112. 5.

Chraity is figured a childe, becauſe the charitable ought to be humble and courteous as a childe. Charity is pictured naked, for that ſhe ſeeketh not her own. Charity looketh merrily, God loveth a chearful giver. Charity is covered with a cloud: Alms muſt be given privately. Charity holdeth a bloody heart in the right hand, A good man is merciful and lendeth, he firſt pitieth, and then relieveth. Charity offereth honey to a Bee without wings, that is, helpeth ſuch as would, but cannot help themſelves. This is charity, without the which, though a man ſhould give all his goods to the poor, yea, and his body to be burned, he were nothing; All were to no purpoſe or profit at all. We ſee then the riſe of our good works. The end followeth, and that muſt be chiefly the glory of God in our own and other mens comfort and ſalvation. Our labour of love in miniſtring to the Saints muſt be ſhewed toward his name, Heb. 6. 10. that is, for his ſake and ſervice. Yea, whatever we do in word or deed (and he that ſheweth mercy muſt both bleed inwardly, ſpeak comfortably, and act charitably) we muſt do it in the name, that is, to the glory of the Lord Jeſus, giving thanks to God and the father, that he holds us worthy to do him any ſuch ſervice. Indigni certè ſumus qui ſtipem pauperi, &c. ſaith a learned Divine. Unworthy we are doubtleſs of ſuch an honour, as to relieve hungry, thirſty, naked Chriſt in his poor members. The Macedonians counted and called it a favour, that they might have their hand in ſo good a work, 2 Cor. 8. 1. And David thanks God that of his own he will take an offering, 1 Chron. 29. 9. Far be it from us to ſound a trumpet, and ſeek our ſelves, as the Phariſees: who, as they were hypocrites, that is, ſtage-players, (as the word properly ſignifieth) ſo they did all theatrically, hiſtrionically, hypocritically, to be ſeen of men. This was the Butt they ſhot at, and they had it; as Stage-players have ſome ſmall piece of money given them by the ſpectators, ſo theſe had the air of applauſe, They have their reward, ſaith our Saviour. Mercedem ſuam non Dei, ſaith Hierom: their reward, not Gods, Egregiam vero laudem, &c. let them make them merry with it, its all they are like to have. Fruit that grows by the high-way-ſide, ſeldom reſteth till it be ripe. The cackling hen loſeth her egg: ſo doth the vain-glorious giver his reward. Wherefore let him that giveth, do it with ſimplicity, with ingenuity, Rom. 12. 8. not with a ſquint-reſpect to his own commendation: Let him account it enough, that he hath God the witneſs of his heart, who will not forget his labour of love, but make ample and honourable mention thereof in that ſtately Amphitheatre, in that great Panegyris at the laſt day. When the Judge ſhall ſet them on his right hand (which is a place both of dignity and ſafety) and ſay unto them. Come ye bleſſed, &c. For I was hungred, and ye gave me meat, &c. Secret thine alms therefore; Why ſhould the left-hand know what the right hand doth? Steal we benefits upon our poor brethren, as Joſeph did the money into the ſacks. A treaſure hid is ſafeſt from thieves; Thy father that ſeeth in ſecret ſhall reward thee openly. It is reported of the Jews, that about their Alms-box they wrote this abbreviature צ"מ, that is, A gift in ſecret pacifieth wrath, Prov. 21. 14. And for the matter of our good works thus much.

Follows next the meaſure; and ſo rich men are required to be rich in good works, to do good anſwerable to their ability, and ſometimes alſo above it, as is above-laid. Leſt if their receipts be found great, their layings out ſmall, God, the chief Lord, (who called his ſervant that had five talents, to account for five) ſhould caſt back ſuch lewd bils into their faces, and turn them out of their ſtewardſhip with everlaſting contempt, Where much is given, much is required. The Lord looks that rich men ſhould lay up treaſures in heaven, Mat. 6. 20. Now two-pence is no treaſure; That they ſhould make them friends with the riches of unrighteouſneſs, which is not done with a half peny, or ſome ſmall ſum; to ſow bountifully, 2 Cor. 9. 6. and to abound unto the riches of their liberality, as thoſe poor Macedonians did, to the ſhame of the richer Corinthians, who were nothing ſo free and forward, 2 Cor. 8. 2. Thus Zacheus is commended for giving half he had to the poor; Dorcas for the fulneſs of her good works; Cornelius for his much alms to many people. Job was old excellent at this duty, Chap. 31. 16, 21. ſo were alſo many others that I might here inſtance out of hiſtories.

Thirdly, For the manner (for that's all in all, that makes or mars the action) Rich men ſtand charged in the Text, to be ready to diſtribute, to come off freely, and chearfully, to be ready and ſpeedy to works of mercy, without hucking or ſhucking, conſults or delays. Our obedience herein muſt be prompt and preſent, as Arannahs that noble noble Jebusite, renowned for his bounty: He had but a Subjects purse, but a Kings heart: These things gave Araunah as a King to the King. God set him up an Altar, and he was ready with his sacrifice: so should we. To distribute and communicate forget not, omit not, grudge not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased. Only, he strains upon no man whatsoever he finds in his heart to bring, that let him offer, is often reiterated in Moses Law. Men sow chearfully in good ground, and account their seed better in the ground, then in the garner. And is not mercy as sure a grain as vanity? Can we sow upon a better ground then the warm bowels of Jesus Christ? Sow therefore plentifully, sow chearfully: God loves a chearful giver, and requires us to love mercy, not shew it only. It hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to contribute to the poor Saints, Rom. 15. 26. It pleased them, it was a free-will-offering, they were not compelled to it by law, or drawn to it by importunity of friends. They did not manu dare & vultu negare, give with the hand and pull back again with the looks. That which is freely given, is twice given. And here, exercise will facilitate: as a sword often drawn comes forth with ease. But God likes not that our alms should come from us as drops of blood from our hearts; or that it should be squeezed out of us, as verjuce out of a crab: but that it flow from us as water out of a spring, as light from the Sun as honey from the comb, &c. that we be glad of an opportunity of shewing mercy, and seek it rather then be without it. Blessed is the man that considereth the poor and needy, Psal. 41. 1. Qui præoccupat vocem petituri, as Austin expoundeth it, that prevents the beggar, and goes home to him. as Dr. Taylour used to do. Abraham sat in his Tent-door at mid-day, waiting for passengers, whom he might receive and refresh in their hot and hard travels. He staid not to be entreated, but beseecheth them to turn in, and take part; neither was he any peny-father in his provisions Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares, Heb. 13. 2.

Fourthly, For the Constancy of their bounty: Rich men must be yet still communicative, and not weary of well-doing. Ye have ministred to the necessities of the Saints, and do also minister, saith the Author to the Hebrews. And S. Paul commendeth his Macedonians, that they had sent once and again to his necessities. And a little afore, I rejoyce in the Lord greatly, that now at the last your care of me hath flourished again, v. 10. It had suffered (it seems) a wain, a winter, a decay; as the Ephesians also (and perhaps Timothy, their Angel) had left their first love: So these Philippians love and care to the poor prisoner Paul had languished, but now it revived, reflourished; And ye have well done, saith he, that ye did communicate with mine affliction, v. 14. This is to resemble God, who causeth every day his Sun to shine, and his rain to fall even upon rebels and reprobates also: to teach us, whiles we have time to do good to all, even those that are unworthy, if in extream necessity. Amongst the Manichees it was a capital crime, to give a crust to one that was not a Manichee. But if we will do nothing for the man, yet something in that case we should do for manhood. Hide not thine eyes from thine own flesh, from one that is a man as thy self art: The good Samaritan did not, and is commended. Howbeit, the houshold of faith must especially be looked to, and that continually, as God reneweth his mercy to them every morning, nay every moment. He gives unto all men, and at all times liberally, and hits no man in the teeth; unless it be with his seldom seeking to him. Hitherto ye have asked me nothing, said our Saviour to his disciples, that yet had asked him many things, and obtained them. But to him it seemed nothing, who waits to shew them mercy. The eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear with hearing: no more is God with doing good to his people. Blessed be God, saith the Church, that daily ladeth us with benefits, that crowneth us with loving kindnesses, and compasseth us about with new songs of deliverance. O continue thy loving kindness, saith David. It is in the original, Draw it out. Gods mercies to his are a continued series, there is a concatenation, a connexion betwixt them. Now the rule is, Be merciful, as your heavenly Father is merciful. For which another Evangelist hath, Be ye perfect, as your Father in heaven is perfect. The perfection of a godly man is, To follow God fully, as Caleb did; to have a heart full of goodness as those Romans, chap. 15. 14. and a life full of good works, as Tabitha, Acts 9. 33. To follow on to know the Lord, and to do good to men, whiles he hath a day to live. In the morning sow thy seed, &c. Eccl. 11.

Which to do, that we fail not, faint not, look up lastly, to the recompence of reward, which which is large and liberal. Such as are thus forward to do good for the matter, rich in good works, for the measure ready to distribute, for the manner, and willing to communicate for the constancy of their bounty, they shall not lose all, saith the Text, nay they shall gain a great deal both here and hereafter.

Here it shall go well with them: they shall lay up a sure foundation for their souls, bodies, names, estates, posterity.

First, For their souls, The liberal soul shall be made fat: and he that watereth shall be watered himself. His soul shall be like a watered garden, &c. Isa. 58. 8 9. a plain and plentiful place. Of Stephen King of Hungary, and of Oswald sometimes King of England it is storied, That their right hands, though dead, never putrified; because much exercised in helping and relieving the necessitous and afflicted. Sure it is, that the souls of such as do it in manner aforesaid, decay not, die not, wither not. See Prov. 11. 17. Luke 16. 11, 12, &c. Thus for grace; and for peace, wealth never comforts the heart till it be bestowed, till distilled, as it were, in good works. The spirits of wealth comfort the conscience.

In my commentary on Mat. 5. 7.

Secondly For their bodies; If thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, then shall thy health spring forth speedily, Isa. 58. But say the merciful man be sick, as he may and must. God will make his bed in all his sickness: God will stir up feathers under him: his soul shall be at ease, and his body be sweetly refreshed: mercy shall be his cordial, his pillow of repose, as it was to reverend Mr. Whately of Banbury, of whom I have spoken elsewhere.

Populus me sibilat, at mihi plaudo ipse domi simulac nummos contemplor in arca. Juven. Ἐπιστον ἀχθος ἀρουρης Hom. Isa 32. 8.

Thirdly, For their names: The liberal shall have all love and respect with men, all good repute and report both alive and dead. And a good name we know, is better then ointments, Eccl. 7. 1. riches, Prov. 22. 1. life it self. Whereas the vile shall not be called liberal, nor Nabal called Nadib, the churl bountiful in Christs Kingdom, Isa. 32. 5. Gods people shall not spare to call a spade a spade, a niggard a niggard. And although he applaud himself at the sight of his abundance, not caring though the world hiss and hoot at him: yet he shall pass among all for a hog in a trough, for a boar in a stie, and be no otherwise esteemed or accounted then the great Turk; of whom it is said, That where ever he sets his foot, nothing grows after him. In a word, God will curse him, men will curse him, and wish to be rid of him: the place where he lives, longs for a vomit to spue him out as an unprofitable burden, such as the very ground groans under.

Eleemosyna ars omnium quæstuosissima. Chrys. Quicquid paupertibus spargimus, nobis colligimus. D. Beddingf. Manus pauperum gazophylacium Christi. Psal. 112.

Fourthly, For their estates: The liberal man deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things he shall stand. A man would think he should fall rather, by being so bountiful; but he takes a right course to thrive: for getting is not the way to abundance, but giving, as we see in the Samaritan. The gainfullest art is alms-giving, saith Chrysostom. Whatsoever we scatter to the poor, we gather for our selves, saith another. Riches laid out this way are laid up; Non pereunt sed parturiunt, saith a third. The poor mans hand is Christs treasury, Christs bank, saith an Antient. By our liberality he accounts himself both gratified and engaged, Prov. 19. 17. And his bare word is better then any mans bond. Heaven and earth must be emptyere he fail to repay. God will bless the merciful mans stock and store, Deut. 15. 10. his righteousness and his riches together shall endure for ever: He that giveth to the poor shall not lack, Prov. 28. 27. that is a bargain of Gods own making. A certain poor Minister being asked an alms, called to his wife to know what money was in the house: And understanding that there was no more then one three-pence only; Give him that, said he, for we must sow, or else we shall never reap. A certain good Bishop of Millain, journeying with his servant, was met by poor people that begged somewhat of him. He commanded his servant to give them all that little money that he had, which was three crowns. The servant (thinking with himself, that it were best keep somewhat for their own use) gave only two of the three to the poor, reserving the third to bear their own charges at night. Soon after, certain Nobles meeting the Bishop, and knowing him to be a good man, and bountiful to the poor, commanded two hundred crowns to be delivered to the Bishops servant for his masters use. The servant having received the money, ran with great joy, and told his master. Ah, said the Bishop, What wrong hast thou done both me and thy self? Si enim tres dedisses trecentos accepisses. Surely if thou hadst given those three crowns, as I appointed thee, thou hadst received for them three hundred. So, thou hast lost me a hundred crowns to day. God's a liberal pay-maſter, and all his retributions are more then bountiful.

Laſtly, For their poſterity. The righteous is merciful and lendeth, and his ſeed is bleſſed, Pſal. 37. 26. Jonathan is paid for his kindneſs to David in Mephiboſheth, Jethro for his love to Moſes in the Kenites, 1. Sam. 15. 6. ſome hundred of years after he (their Anceſtour) was dead. The Egyptians might not be unkindly dealt withal, for their harbouring the Patriarchs, though they afflicted their poſterity. But Moabites and Ammonites were baſtardized and excluded the Tabernacle to the tenth generation, for a meer omiſſion, becauſe they met not Gods Iſrael with bread and water in the wilderneſs. Let there be none to extend mercy unto him (ſaith the Pſalmiſt by a ſpirit of prophecy) neither let there be any to favour his fatherleſs children: And why? Becauſe that he remembred not to ſhew mercy, Pſal. 109. 12, 16. This was fulfilled in Haman, and is fulfilled in daily experience. Hence riches ill gotten or ill kept ſhift maſters ſo oft. It is not true that is commonly ſpoken, Happy is that ſon whoſe father goes to the devil: for ſuch goods ſeldom proſper, except it be with ſome odd one, that by repentance breaks off, and heals his fathers ſin by mercifulneſs to the poor, and ſo makes him friends with thoſe riches of unrighteouſneſs. So our Saviour cals them, either becauſe rich men are for moſt part unrighteous themſelves, or the ſons of unrighteous perſons: or elſe, unrighteous, that is, uncertain, vain, deceitful, ſuch as will give us the ſlip; for ſo the word may be taken, according to the uſe of the Hebrew and Syriack tongues. His riches periſh by evil travel, ſaith Solomon; and he begetteth a ſon, and there is nothing in his hand. Eccl. 5. 14. For either he leaves it to a prodigal, that rides to hell with golden ſpurs, and forks it abroad as faſt as the miſer his father raked it together. Or, if he be never ſo good an husband, yet uſually he thrives not, but melts as ſnow before the ſun. So that a man had better leave his child a wallet to beg from door to door, then a curſed hoard of goods either gotten by evil arts, or ſpared when they ſhould have been ſpent upon the poor and needy.

Thus for the life preſent, Merciful men lay up in ſtore a good foundation both for themſelves and theirs.

As for the life to come, They lay hold hereby upon eternal life: which by good works is, 1. Aſſured them here, Prov. 14. 21. Prov. 11. 17. Mat. 5. 7. Jam. 2. 13. 2. Enjoyed of them hereafter. 1. At the hour of death; for when riches ſhall fail, riches well uſed ſhall let us into heaven, Luke 16. 9 God freely crowning his own grace in us. 2. At the day of judgement, when your effectul faith ſhewn by your works ſhall be found to praiſe, honour and glory before God, Angels and men; Chriſt mentioning and celebrating their good deeds only, ſuch as they had forgotten, or thought he had taken no notice of, and ſhall therefore ask, When ſaw we thee hungry, and fed thee, naked, and cloathed thee? &c. But there is a book of remembrance written before him of all the particulars, which ſhall then be produced. When mercileſs men ſhall meet with their own meaſure, as Dives who denied crums, and could not therefore obtain a drop of water to cool his tongue; they ſhall in vain tire out the deaf mountains to quaſh them to pieces, or grinde them to powder; but (will they nill they) muſt receive judgement without mercy, becauſe they ſhewed no mercy. Then ſhall mercy rejoyce againſt damnation; or glory over it, as over its adverſary. A godly man moved with compaſſion lifts up his head, and overcomes the fear of being condemned in judgement. He can tender to Gods mercy, and melting-heartedneſs, and thereby expect the ſame from him, as David did, Pſal. 86. 2. Preſerve my ſoul, for I am merciful. Alphonſus King of Spain, was in great likelyhood to have been made King of Romans; but loſt it to Richard of England; For being a great Mathematician (ſaith the Chronicler) he was drawing of lines, when he ſhould have been drawing his purſe; and ſo fell from his high hopes. So doth many a man from his poſſibilities of heaven, by buſying himſelf about many things, and not attending the opportunities of love and good works. Joſeph made a gain of the famine, and bought up the land of Ægypt; ſo might we of the poor, and buy heaven. Not for any worth of the work: (for alas, what proportion? No more, ſurely, then betwixt a kingdom and a nut-ſhell; But) becauſe faithful is he who hath promiſed, who alſo will do it, not to the half as Herod, but to the whole of his kingdom.

AMBITION.

1 JOHN 2. 16.

For all that is in the world, the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eye, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but of the world.

PLeaſure, profit, preferment (called here the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eye, and the pride of life) are the worldlings Trinity, to the which he performeth inward & outward worſhip. According to the three things which the woman by falſe ſuggeſtion law in the tree for meat, for the eyes, and for prudence. And according to our Saviours three-fold temptation, Mat. 4. the laſt whereof by the vain pomp and glory of the world, he could leaſt of all endure, and therefore bids the Tempter Avaunt. Our Apoſtle, ver. 13. of this Chapter tells us, That a man may be very mortified, even a Father, and yet very ſubject to dote on the world; which may be fitly likened to the ſerpent Scytale, whereof it is reported, that when ſhe cannot overtake the flying paſſengers, ſhe doth with her beautiful colours ſo aſtoniſh and amaze them, that they have no power to paſs away till ſhe have ſtung them. Balaam could not but go after the wages of wickedneſs, the preferment that was proffered him. Nay Baruc (a far better man) is ſeeking great things for himſelf, Hezekiah ſhewing his treaſury, Jonas over-tender of his reputation, Nicodemus for the ſame cauſe, coming haltingly to Chriſt, as a night-bird; and the Apoſtles ſtrangely tranſported with an idle conceit of an earthly Kingdom, wherein they dream'd there ſhould be (as once in Davids and Solomons daies) a diſtribution of honours and officers. Hence ſo many frivolous and fruitleſs queſtions and requeſts; as that of the mother of Zebedees children, put on by her ambitious ſons, who were aſhamed to make the motion. Yea many times moſt unſeaſonably and unſavourily, when Chriſt had been fore-warning them of his ignominious death, and fore arming them againſt the ſcandal of the croſs, they fell into thoſe abſurd diſputes, who ſhould be the greateſt among them, and have the higheſt place of preferment, as Mar. 9. 31, 32, 33, 34. And whereas our Saviour diſſwaded them this folly, and ſet a child in the midſt of them to learn them lower thoughts, S. John ſoon fated with ſuch ſad diſcourſe, interrupts his maſter; and laying hold on ſomething he had ſaid, v. 37. tels a ſtory of another buſineſs, v. 38. Yea, ſo ſowred were they and ſwoln with this Phariſaical leaven, that they were at it again the third time, Luke 22. 24. And that, 1. After that our Saviour had fore-told them that his death ſhould fall out within three daies. 2. When they had newly received the Lords Supper, that φλεγμαινον καθαρτήριον, as a Father cals it. 3. After that Chriſt had waſhed their feet, to teach them a leſſon of humility and heavenly mindedneſs. So ambitious are the beſt by nature, ſo liciriſh after earthly honours.

And that becauſe they are ſo near us, and ſo natural to us, they dazle our weak eyes; and, as a ſawcer held cloſe to the eyes, cauſeth that we cannot ſee a mountain that is before; ſo theſe poor things over-prized, makes us ſand-blind, and ſuch as cannot ſee far off, thoſe crowns, ſcepters, kingdoms, glories, beauties, braveries above that ſhould draw up our affections. Mother earth (ſince we loſt paradiſe) gets our hearts. Cardinal Burbon will not loſe his part in Paris, for his part in Paradiſe. Cardinal Wolſey rode thorow London with twentie great mules for his ſumpter-horſes; cauſed his Cardinals hat (when it was firſt ſent him) to be ſet upon a Cup-board at Weſtminſter, and tapers round about it; ſo that the greateſt Duke in the land muſt make courteſie thereunto, and to his empty ſeat, he being away. He had as much yearly revenue as all the Biſhops and Deans of this Kingdom put together had. And for his houſhold attendance, he had one Earl, nine Barons, a great ſort of Knights and Eſquires, and of others of inferiour rank, four hundred at leaſt. Well therefore might Bilney the Martyr conclude of him, My Lord Cardinal is no good man; for Chriſt never taught him to follow riches and promotions, to wear ſhoes of ſilver and gilt, ſet with pearls and precious ſtones; Nor Chriſt had never two croſſes of ſilver, two axes, nor pillars of ſilver and gilt, &c. Eraſmus tels of a Preacher at Rome, that delivered himſelf thus before the Pope and his Cardinals Matteſan Peirro, ſan Paulo mat; that is, S. Peter was a fool, S. Paul alſo a fool. And being convented for this Doctrine, he thus explained himſelf, Either they were fools that lived ſo poorly, or you (their ſucceſſors) are too blame that live ſo pompouſly. Others make mention of a certain painter, who being blamed by a Cardinal for colouring the viſages of Peter and Paul too red, tartly replyed, That he painted them ſo, as bluſhing at the ambition of their ſucceſſors. It is thought of Cardinal Pool, that toward his latter end, a little before his coming from Rome to England, he began ſomewhat to favour the doctrine of Luther, and was no leſs ſuſpected at Rome, and therefore put by the Popedom. Notwithſtanding the pomp and glory of the world afterward carried him away to play the Papiſt, as it did Demas; of whom there are that write, that after he forſook S. Paul, he became a Prieſt in an Idol Temple. The Author to the Hebrews reckons and ranks the tempting and alluring promiſes of preferment among the bloody deeds of the Heathen perſecutors, They were ſawn aſunder, they were tempted, Heb. 11. 37. but no way prevailed againſt; As neither was that heroical Luther. Vergerius treating with him from the Pope, put him in mind of Æneas Sylvius, who following his own opinions with much ſlavery and labour, could get no further preferment then to be Canon of Trent; but being changed to the better, became Biſhop Cardinal, and finally Pope Pius the ſecond. He called to his memory Beſſarion of Nice, who of a poor Caloier of Trapezond became a great renowned Cardinal, and wanted not much of being Pope. This had been ſomewhat to a man, Cui ambitionis ſaſſugo bibulam animam poſſederat. But this Crucifix of mortification cried out with S. Paul, I am crucified to the world, and the world to me, Contemptus eſt à me Romanus & favor & furor, I care neither for the fawns nor frowns of Rome. Of the the ſame mould and metal was D. Taylour Martyr, whom to reduce, they promiſed him not only his pardon, but great promotion, and a Biſhoprick: Sed ſurdo fabulam; they could not perſwade him, for he looked for a better reſurrection. So did William Hunter, another zealous Martyr, with whom, after his condemnation, Biſhop Bonner perſwaded, ſaying: If thou wilt recant, I will make thee a free-man in the City, and give thee 40 l. in good money to ſet up thine occupation withal; or I will make thee Steward of mine houſe, and ſet thee in office &c. But a good heart will rather lie in the duſt then riſe by wickedneſs: and ſooner part with all then with the peace of a good conſcience. Thus Hooper deſired rather to be diſcharged of his Biſhoprick then yield to certain Ceremonies: Latimer at the coming in of the ſix Articles in King Henry the 8. time, reſigned up his office, and remained a great ſpace unbiſhopped. Hermannus Archbiſhop of Colen reformed his Church from certain Papiſtical ſuperſtitions, uſing therein the aid and advice of Martin Bucer. Wherefore he was depoſed by the Emperour, which he patiently ſuffered. B. Ridley when Q. Mary was proclaimed ſpeedily repairing to Fremingham to ſalute her, had ſuch cold welcome there, that being deſpoiled of all his dignities, he was ſent back on a lame halting horſe to the tower. But God no doubt recompenſed perſed theſe men leſſes, as that King of Poland did his noble ſervant Zeliſlaus, having loſt his hand in his wars, he ſent him a golden hand for it. Valentinian tribune to Julian the Apoſtate, was by him diſcarded and baniſhed for ſtriking a Sextan, who had ſprinkled him with Heathenish holy-water, as he went before the Emperour into a certain Idol-temple. But within leſs then two years after, Valentinian was called home and created Emperour. And that I may uſe the words of Oroſius, He that for Chriſt names ſake had loſt a Tribuneſhip, within a while after ſucceeded his perſecutour in the Empire it ſelf. Chriſt is a liberal paymaſter: and all his retributions are more then bountiful.

The Pope his pretended Vicar is not ſo. He promiſeth our Engliſh fugitives indeed as large as the devil did, All theſe things will I give thee &c. But when that all comes to all, Sanders is ſtarved; Stapleton made Profeſſour of a petty Univerſity, ſcarce ſo good as one of our free-ſchools: William Raynolds is nominated to a ſmal Vicarage under value. On Harding his Holineſs beſtowed a Prebend of Gaunt, or to ſpeak more properly, a Gaunt Prebend: Roffenſis had a Cardinals hat ſent him, but his head was cut off before it came. Allin had a Cardinals hat, but with ſo thin lining (means to ſupport his ſtate) that he was commonly called The ſtarveling Cardinal. When he createth Cardinals, his words are, Be ye brethren to us, and Princes of the world. And indeed ſome of them have Princes revenues, as the Cardinal of Toledo, Ments, Collen, &c. and Princes ſpirits, as Cardinal Columnus, who when the Pope threatned to take away his Cardinals hat, He preſently replied, That then he would put on an helmet to pull him out of his throne. Eraſmus writes, that he knew ſome, who when they were like to die would give great ſums of money for a Cardinals hat, that they might be ſo ſtiled upon their tombs and monuments. And ſo ambitious were the Romans of the Conſulſhip, that when Maximus died in the laſt day of his office, Caninius petitioned Cæſar for that part of the day that remained; whence that ſo memorated jeſt of Tully, O vigilant Conſul, who never ſaw ſleep all the time of his office! Pitty it were but that theſe men ſhould have had what they ſo greatly deſired, ſo dearly purchaſed; They have their reward, ſaith our Saviour; of ſuch. A poor reward, a little breath of popular applauſe, ſuch as is not able to blow one cold blaſt upon ungodly great ones, then when they ſhall be hurried from their ſtately Palaces, and hurled into the burning lake, there to cry, Nos inſenſati, We fools, ſhould have been as ambitious of heavens honours with Moſes, Heb. 11. of getting an office in Gods houſe with David, of keeping a good conſcience with Paul, of being quiet, and medling with our buſineſs, as he wils his Theſſalonians. This if Ioannes Funccius the Chronologer, and Juſtus Jonas the Lawyer (two learned Dutchmen) had done, they had never died (as they did) by the hands of the hangman. But this is often ſeen to be the end of the ambitious, as of Abſolom, Haman, Pharaoh Ophra (Jer. 44. 30.) whom Herodotus calleth Apryes, and telleth us, that he uſually boaſted that he cared not for any either God or man that ſhould ſeek to take away his Kingdom. But at length he was taken in battle by Amaſis one of his own officers, and ſtrangled by the Ægyptians, his own people. Hanno was hanged at Carthage for his ambition. Roger Mortimer here at Tiburn in Edward the ſeconds time, and a hundred more whom I might eaſily mention. What got moſt of the Cæſars by their overhaſty preferment, Niſi ut citiùs interficerentur, as one ſaith, but to be ſlain the ſooner? Cæſar Borgia Duke of Valence, emulating Julius Cæſar, uſed this ſaying of his, Aut Cæſar, aut nullus. Not long after, he was ſlain in the Kingdom of Navarr. Iehoahaz ſon of Ioſiah (Jeremy ſeems to call him Shallum) though younger then his brother Iehoiakim, ambitiouſly ſteps into the throne after his fathers death; And before he was well warm in it, he had great thoughts, and would not take it as as his father did. He would build a ſtately Palace, much enlarge himſelf, and (as it ſeemeth by one affix in the Text, Jer. 22. 24. ſaith a learned Divine) he would take in a piece of Gods houſe too. But within a while after he was carried captive to Ægypt for his ambition, and died there ingloriouſly. So did Alexander the great in the midſt of his victories. He required of the Jews that their dates ſhould be taken from his raign, and all the Prieſts ſons born that year ſhould be called Alexanders. Into Grecia he ſent to be holden a god by them. Apelles pictured him with a thunderbolt. Lyſippus with this poſie, Iupiter, aſſerui terram mihi, tu aſſere cœlum; O Iupiter take thou heaven; for the earth I challenge to my ſelf. With which pictures Alexander was ſo delighted, that he proclaimed that none ſhould take his picture but Lyſippus and Apelles. As for Caliſthenes the Philoſopher that diſſwaded diſſwaded him from theſe vanities, he was carried about in a cage, in a moſt opprobrious manner. That made him to be cut off quickly, and his family to be rooted out, as the Angel foretelleth, Dan. 11. 4. And as he might have been forewarned, by the example of Ahaſhuerosh, that is, Xerxes, the ſon of a former Darius (not the ſame that he overthrew) who though he were the King of 127 Provinces (Eſther 1. 2.) yet was ready to fight for more. O therefore that our aſpiring Ambitioniſts would but meaſure themſelves by their own moddle, take the length of their own bodies, as he did once in the duſt where he lay laſt: conſider what poor things they are, as they proceed from the ſlime of their parents: How helpleſs in their birth, how uncertain of their life, how little a thing will cloath them and feed them, how little a thing will make an end of them. A little viper, a little ſpider, a little needle at their hearts will kill them; then, a little ſheet will wind them, a little grave hold them, a little worm eat out their hearts. And ſhould ſuch think great things of themſelves, or ſeek great things for themſelves? And yet every mothers childe of us are too much the true ſons of our great grandmother Eve, and would be more then we are. Man bears nothing ſo impatiently as contempt, deſires nothing ſo much as reſpect with others. I have ſinned (ſaid Saul) yet honour me before the people. Iehu muſt be ſeen, or all's loſt. I fear leſt the fugitives will mock me, ſaid Zedekiah. This day you ſhall ſee me return from Court either high-Prieſt or an exile, ſaid Caſar to his mother. Let him kill me, ſo he may be Emperour, ſaid ſhe of her ſon Nero. Ambition rides without reins, as Tullia did over the dead body of her father, to be made a Queen: And where it hath poſſeſt it ſelf thoroughly of the ſoul, it turns the heart into ſteel, and makes it uncapable of a conſcience, as we ſee in Abimelech, Haman, Athaliah, &c. All ſin will eaſily down with the man that is reſolved to riſe. In the year of Chriſt, 467. Timotheus Herulus, when he could not otherwiſe get a Biſhoprick, went by night all about the Monks cels in Alexandria, and, calling them each by his name, told them, That he was an Angel ſent from God to require them to caſt out Proterius their Biſhop, and to chuſe in his place Timotheus Herulus. And having hereby gained them to his ſide, and gotten a great ſort of the rude rabble by gifts and fair promiſes to adhere to him, he invaded the Biſhoprick of Alexandria by force, ſlew the good Biſhop, and ſix others with him on an Eaſter-day, at the foot of the font, whither he had fled for ſhelter, caſt out his dead body, drew it all about, and afterwards burnt it. So powerfully did the myſterie of iniquity work even in thoſe better times. Zeno the Emperour laid a paper on the altar, that God might write therein the name of him who ſhould be Biſhop of Conſtantinople. But Flavitas, corrupeing the Sextan of the Church, cauſed him to write in his name, and ſo was made Biſhop. When none other would lift Hildebrand up into Peters Chair, he gat up himſelf; for who could better judge of him then himſelf? Harden thy forehead (ſaith Calvus to Vatinius) and ſay boldly, that thou deſerveſt the Prætorſhip better then Cato. Ambition, I confeſs, is not ordinarily ſo broad-ſpoken, but goes diſguiſed under a vail of modeſty, neceſſity, religion, &c. as in thoſe that diſparage themſelves, that they may draw in others to commend them; as in Richard the third, who pleaded the neceſſity of the State for his abhorred uſurpation; And as in Selymus the Turk and Hiſmael the Perſian, who did under the colour and zeal of their religion both pretend juſt cauſes of war, although their evil-diſſembled ambitious deſires plainly declared unto the world, that they both ſhot at one and the ſame mark, the extending the bounds of their great Empires. There were many pretences given out for the civil war betwixt Pompey and Caſar (ſaith the Hiſtorian) but if you'll have the truth of it, the very cauſe was the

the desire of preheminence and sole government. The one could not bear a superiour, nor the other an equal. The same was the ground of all the quarrel of old, between the Bishops of Constantinople and Rome; as, of latter time between Francis King of France, and Charls the fifth Emperour of Germany; And is still between the Kings of Spain and other Monarches of Christendom, whilest they labour so earnestly the setting up of their Catholike Monarchy. When Captain Drake took S. Domingo in America, 1585. in the Town-hall were to be seen the King of Spains arms, and under them a globe of the world, out of which arose a horse with his fore-feet cast forth, with this inscription, NON SUFFICIT ORBIS, The world is not enough for me to conquer. This was laughed at, as an argument of the Spaniards avarice and ambition, which is indeed unsatisfiable. One womb could hold Romulus and Remus, not one Kingdom. Athens could not contain two Alcibiades, nor Sparta two Lysanders. Alexander would not divide the Persian Empire with Darius. Our Henry the second crowned his eldest son Henry whiles he was yet alive, and that set him a seeking his fathers death. He also had made his second son John, Earl of Cornwall, Dorset, Sommerset, Nottingham, Darby and Lancaster; Which mighty estate was not a means to satisfie but encrease his desires, and make him more dangerous at home. Ambition like the Crocodile, groweth while it liveth: or like the Ivy, which rising at the foot, will over-peer the highest wall. Base it is and slavish; it will fall down to rise, crouch and creep to mount. Sixtus Quintus, saith one, was the most crouching humble Cardinal that ever was lodged in a coven, and the most proud, ambitious Pope that ever ware crown. And Paul the third (saith Thuanus) covered his deep ambition for a long time with as deep dissimulation of sobriety, gravity, sanctimony and bodily infirmity, whereof when he had once got that dignity, he made a full discovery. Bishop Bonner at first seemed to be a good man, a favourer of Luthers doctrines, and advanced he was only by the Lord Cromwell, for whom nevertheless (after his execution) Bonner had not a good word, but the lewdest, vilest, and bittrest he could speak; calling him the rankest heretick that ever lived, and that it had been good he had been dispatcht long ago. Æneas Sylvius defended this truth, That the Council was above the Pope, and commended the Germans for opposing the Pope. But when he saw that this was not the way to preferment, he turned tipper, taught the contrary Doctrine, and became Pope. In the inthronization of the Pope, before he is set in his Chair, and puts on his Triple crown, a piece of tow or wad of straw is set on fire before him, and one appointed to say, Sic transit gloria mundi, The glory of this world is but a blaze. This, if it were well considered by those ambitious Bishops, they would not buy repentance at so dear a rate. S. Luke calls all Agrippa's pomp a phantasie: S. Matthew all the worlds glory an opinion; S. Paul a Mathematical figure, that is something in the minde, nothing out of it. Surely in a vain shew walketh every man, saith David, surely he disquiets himself in vain, heaping up riches, and by riches honours, according to that of Labans sons, murmuring against Iacob, Gen. 31. 1. Of that which was our fathers hath he made all this glory, that is, all that wealth, as the Chaldee expounds it: for riches make glory, get respect; Thus shall ye say to him that liveth, saith David of rich Nabal; for poor men are looked upon as dead men out of minde. Hence Tully judgeth the Jews religion to be naught, because they were so oft overcome and impoverished: but the religion of Rome to be right, because the Romans prospered and became Lords of the world. Hence Aigoland King of Arragon, coming to the Court of Charls the great, and promising to be baptized, when he saw many poor people expecting; alms from the Emperours table, and asking what they were? was answered, That they were the servants of God; he speedily returned, and desperately protested, That he would not serve that God which could no better preferr and provide for his servants. But Christs Kingdom is not of this world, I know thy poverty, saith he to one of those seven Churches, but thou art rich, rich in faith, in good works, &c. And thou art honourable, For since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable, and I have loved thee. Vertue is a thousand Escucheons. And nothing so enobles as grace, and being within the Covenant; I have blessed Ismael; twelve Princes shall he beget, but my Covenant will I establish with Isaac. The Nobles of Israel made their staves (the ensigns haply of their honour) instruments of the common good, Numbers 21. 18. And, Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your servant, Mat. 20. 26. Those Nobles

Nobles of Tekoah are much blamed and blemiſhed, for that they put not their necks to the Lords yoke, Nehem. 3. 1. But Theodoſius ſhall ever be renowned, that held it a greater honour to be a member of the Church, then Head of the Empire. The righteous ſhall be had in everlaſting remembrance, but the name of the wicked ſhall rot; as Beckets now doth, who was ſo ſolemnly Sainted by the Pope. And yet 48. years after, ſaith the French Hiſtory, it was diſputed among the Doctors of Paris, whether he were damned or ſaved? And one Roger a Norman maintained, That this Saint had juſtly deſerved death, and ſuffered not as a Martyr but Malefactour. This was to call a ſpade a ſpade: according to that of the Prophet, fore-telling that in the Kingdom of Chriſt, The vile perſon ſhould no more be called liberal, nor the churl ſaid to be bountiful. Honor eſt in honorante. Now in a godly mans eyes a vile perſon (though never ſo great) is contemned, but he honoreth them that fear the Lord, Pſal. 15. 4. And I had much rather (ſaith a worthy Divine) have the juſt commendation of one godly wiſe man, then the fooliſh admiration of a whole multitude. To be praiſed of a praiſeleſs perſon is no praiſe: therefore the Lord Chriſt ſuffered not the Devil to confeſs him, or tell who he was. But happy is he, that in all things ſerving Chriſt, is acceptable to God, and approved of men, Rom. 14. 18. This is a few inwardly, his praiſe is not of men, but of God, who hath promiſed to honour them that honour him; and taketh order that they that do worthily in Ephrata, ſhall be famous in Bethlehem. Honour is often promiſed as a reward of religion; and was ſo performed to David, when whatſoever he did, pleaſed the people: To Solomon; for beſides wealth and wiſdom, God gave him honour. It is God that faſhioneth mens opinions: therefore Paul praies that his ſervice might be accepted of the Saints; yet was it the bringing of alms, and ſuch uſually are welcome. It is God alſo that gives preferment. Promotion comes neither from Eaſt nor Weſt, no nor yet from the South (where the warm Sun-ſhine is) but from the Lord. And yet how many go daily from his bleſſing into the warm Sun (as we ſay) nay fetch an errand to hell, as ſome of the Popes did, for honours and high places. No ſooner can they hear flattering promiſes of preferment, as it were the melody of Nebuchadnezzars inſtruments, but they preſently fall down and worſhip the Babyloniſh idol. How much better thoſe three children? And before them, Joſeph, who would not yield to his wanton miſtreſs, though he might have been preferred for it? Moſes who refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaohs daughter, and heir of two Kingdoms (as ſome ſay) Origen who was content rather to continue a poor Catechiſt at Alexandria in daily fear of death, then to be ruffling at Court with Plotinus his fellow-pupil, who refuſed to be a Chriſtian? Some Heathens have rejected honours that have been offered them, for the very cumber and danger that attend them. High ſeats are never but uneaſie, and crowns themſelves oft ſtuft with thorns. Therefore Frederick, ſirnamed the Wiſe, Elector of Saxony, when the Empire of Germany was offered unto him, ſeriouſly refuſed it. Seriouſly, I ſay, and not for faſhion only, as the Canoniſts command Biſhops to do when the queſtion is asked, Viſne epiſcopare? Whereunto the Biſhop of Meltine craftily anſwered, Nolens volo, & volens nolo: But did men know the weight of that charge (Quo ipſis etiam angelis tremendum, ſaith Chryſoſtom) they would neither be ſo haſty to get it, nor ſo loth to forgo it. Father Latimer being to reſign up his Biſhoprick, when he firſt put off his rochet in his chamber among his friends, ſuddenly gave a skip in the floor for joy, feeling his ſhoulders ſo light, and being diſcharged, as he ſaid, of ſuch an heavy burden. Fructus honos oneris; fructus honoris, onus. The Hebrew word for Honour ſignifieth weight or preſſure. In alluſion whereunto S Paul cals the glory of heaven a weight of glory. But from aſpiring to that heavenly glory, earthly greatneſs is oft-times no ſmall impediment. The Buſtard or Oſtrich can hardly get upon his wings, whereas the Lark mounts with eaſe. Nay, as thoſe that walk on the top of pinacles are in danger of a precipice, ſo are great men of greateſt ruine. Even heigth it ſelf makes mens brains to ſwim: and he pourtrayed the ambitious man rightly, that pictured him ſnatching at a Crown, and falling with this Motto, Sic me fata ſequor. The poiſonful Aconite, ſo much deſired of the Panther, is purpoſely hung up by the hunters in veſſels above their reach: whereof they are ſo greedy, that they never leave leaping and ſtraining thereat, till they burſt and kill themſelves, and ſo are taken: So do men that aim at honour too high for their reach, and too great for their merit; their heads are lifted up, but it is as Pharaohs Bakers was; And it befals unto them, as to that Duke of Moſcovia, whom when the Tartarian had taken in battle, he made a cup of his ſkull with this inſcription, All covet all loſe. Let not therefore the bramble be King; let not earthly things bear rule in thine affections. Fire will riſe out of them that will conſume the Cedars. Exorientur, ſed exurentur, as Jobs flower, Jonas gourd, Davids bay-tree, or Xerxes his Steerſman, whom he crowned in the morning, and beheaded in the evening of the ſame day. The like befell Haman, Sejanus, and many others. Severus the Emperour finding the emptineſs and inſufficiency of honours and earthly happineſſes (ſweeter far in the ambition then fruition) cries out at laſt, Omnia fui, & nihil expedit, I have tried all things, and find no ſolid content in any thing. That was Solomons verdict of them long before; and thoſe in the Parable, Mat. 20. 13. when the end of the day came, when they were to go into another world, they ſaw that which before they would not believe, that preferment, riches, credit, were but a peny, were but empty things, ſuch as wherewith they were in no wiſe content. In the very purſuit of them is much anguiſh, many grievances, fears, jealouſies, diſgraces, interruptions, &c. Say a man obtain them, they neither make him better in proſperity, but the worſe (as Caligula, then whom there never was a better ſervant, nor worſe Lord. Veſpaſian is ſaid to be the only man that ever became better by being made Emperour. Pius Quintus acknowledged that he was far the worſe man after he came to be Pope.) Nor can they bear up the heart in the day of adverſity. How creſt-fallen was the King of Sodom when overcome by the four Kings? How baſely behaves he himſelf before Abraham a ſtranger, an exile, that was before ſo haughty and refractory! So Manaſſeh, that faced the heavens in his proſperity, in trouble baſely hides his head among the buſhes, and is therehence drawn, bound and carried captive, 2 Chron. 33. 12. But after the unſanctified enjoyment of them follows the ſting of conſcience, that will inexpreſsibly vex and torment the ſoul thorowout all eternity. For if one drop of an evil, unquiet conſcience, will extreamly diſſweeten a full cup of outward comforts in this life preſent, as it will, and make a man weary of the world, as Ahitophel, Judas, &c. What ſhall we think of hell, where the worm bred in the froth of theſe worldly luſts dies not, where the fire of Gods wrath goeth not out? If the wrath of a King be as the roaring of a Lion; and if honours darlings cannot bear their Princes frowns but die by them, as it befell Cornelius Gallus under Auguſtus, and Sr. Chriſtopher Hatton Lord Chancellour under Queen Elizabeth (the Queen having once caſt him down with a word, could not raiſe him up again, though ſhe viſited and comforted him, but that he died of a flux of his urine, and grief of mind) How will they bear the wrath of God, when David (with whom God was but in jeſt, as it were) though mounted on his mountain, could not bear his diſcountenance, Thou didſt hide thy face, and I was troubled.

ANGELS.

Heb. 1. 7.

He maketh his Angels ſpirits, his Miniſters a flame of fire.

CHriſt the Angel of the Covenant is here preferred before all created Angels, and worthily, as Lord and heir of all: Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God: Angels and Authorities, and Powers being made ſubject unto him, ſaith S. Peter. The Papiſts (not out of Peter, but out of one Dionyſius) diſcourſe largely of the heavenly Hierarchy, and tell us of nine ranks and ſubordinations of Angels. but the Author is ſuſpected, and the Scripture herein is ſilent. Now where the Scripture hath no tongue, we need not have ears, but muſt content our ſelves with a learned ignorance, leſt we fall into the ſin of thoſe Angel-worſhippers, Col. 2. 18. intruding into thoſe things which they had not ſeen, vainly puſt up by their fleſhly minds. The Friars ſo puſt up have names given them by their Governors, each according to his merits: and as they encreaſe in their pretended holyneſs, ſo they proceed in their aery titles, from Padre Benedicto to Padre Angelo, then Archangelo, Cherubino, and laſtly, Cerephino, which is the top of perfection. The Seraphims (thoſe flames of fire) whom the Papiſts place in the higheſt order, as neareſt to God, and ſet them as rulers over the inferiour Angels, they alſo are called here Gods Miniſters, yea they are his meſſengers too (whatever the Papiſts ſay to the contrary) Iſa. 6. 6. ſent forth to miniſter for them who ſhall be heirs of ſalvation, Heb. 1. 14. and were not therefore created (as ſome have affirmed) many ages before this viſible world: for then there had been a beginning before that In the beginning, Gen. 1. 1. Beſides, if the Angels be meſſengers and miniſtring ſpirits, what uſe was there of them before there were ſome to whom they might be ſent, and for whom they ſhould miniſter? But, ſay they, If Angels were not created till the world was, why doth not Moſes mention their creation?

Some anſwer thus: leſt, if mention ſhould have been made of Angels in the beginning, God might have been thought to have uſed their help in the Creation. Others ſay, Leſt the Jews, ſo addicted to Idolatry, ſhould (as ſome did) fall into the ſin of Angel-worſhip. Chryſoſtoms reaſon is not to be rejected, That Moſes his purpoſe was only to ſet forth a deſcription of the ſenſible and viſible works of God, applying himſelf to the rudeneſs of that people: and therefore omitting the Doctrine of heavenly ſpirits as far above their underſtanding, and leſs belonging to them or us. For if the Theology for Angels were written, we ſhould need another Bible: the creation and government of Angels containing as great variety of matter, as doth the religion of mankind. Howbeit it is probable they were created the firſt day, Gen. 2. 1. with, and in the higheſt heavens (as Chriſts ſoul was created with, and in his body in the Virgins womb, the ſelf-ſame moment) and are therefore called Angels of heaven. Beſides, thoſe morning ſtars and ſons of God are ſaid to ſing and ſhout when God laid and faſtned the foundation of the earth, Job 38 4, 6, 7. Morning-ſtars they were all then, and Angels of light, ſons alſo of God, as made in his image, and reſembling him as his children, both in their ſubſtance, which is incorporeal, and in their excellent properties, which are life and immortality, bleſſedneſs and glory.

Orthodoxi quidam patres ſenſerunt Angelos creatos eſſe primo die quod tum dixerat Deus, Fiat Lux. i. e. naturæ lucidæ. Bucholc. Iſa. 14. 12.

But now, How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer ſon of the morning? The Devil and his Angels kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their own habitation, Jude 6. For their ſin; ſome ſay, it was pride in affecting Divinity: Some ſay it was envy ſtirred by the decree of exalting mans nature above Angels, in and by Chriſt: Some ſay a tranſgreſſion of ſome commandments in particular, not expreſt, as Adams was. Whether in Paradiſe or heaven there are that diſpute; I have nothing to ſay; neither yet for the time when they fell; ſome think it was the ſecond day, becauſe it is not added, That God ſaw what he had done that day to be good. Sure it is, That his Angels he charged with folly. Neither were they (as the Spaniards ſay of the Portugals) Pocos y locos few and fooliſh: for there was a Legion of them in one man, which is ſix hundred at the leaſt. There are that underſtand of them thoſe ninety and nine ſheep in the Parable, to that one of loſt mankind. The Schoolmen would gather out of 2 King 6. 16. that as many Angels fell as ſtood, but the Scripture defineth nothing of that. It is probable that one fell firſt, and the reſt followed after, which are therefore called his Angels, John 8. 44. evil Angels, ſuch as the Saints ſhall judge, 1 Cor. 6. 3. Reprobate, apoſtate Angels, in oppoſition to thoſe holy and elect, Mat. 25. 31. 1 Tim. 5. 21. who ſtand and continue holy, not by means of Chriſts mediation, but Gods eternal election, and his preventing them with actual grace, which made them effect and execute at the firſt, what ever thing it was wherewith it pleaſed God to prove their obedience. Chriſt, I know well, is called the Head of Angels, but this is in another manner of ſenſe then he is head of the Church; Which is united and ſubjected unto him in a more near and communicative way, as his members, without the which he holds not himſelf compleat, Epheſ. 1. 22, 23. Head of Angels Chriſt is, firſt as God; for he giveth them all they have, both eſſence and continuance. 2. As Mediator, he uſeth their ſervice for the guarding and guiding of his Church and choſen. Not that Chriſt needs their aſſiſtance, as Princes need the counſel and aid of their ſubjects, whom therefore they aſſociate. The holy Angels receive more from Chriſt then they perform or bring to him. But he maketh uſe of their ſervice, 1. To ſeal up his love unto us by imploying ſuch noble creatures about us. 2. To make and maintain love between us and Angels, till we come to walk arm in arm with Angels: For, I will give thee places to walk among theſe that ſtand by, ſaith Chriſt to Jehoſhuah the high-Prieſt; that is, among the Angels: who are elſewhere ſaid to ſtand alway looking on the face of God, to receive commandments, for the accompliſhment of all deſigns for our good. And this they do willingly, ſpeedily, conſtantly, zealouſly, reverently, with an awful reſpect to the divine majeſty, before whom they cover both their feet (as conſcious of a comparative imperfection) and their faces with their wings, as a man claps his hands on his eyes at ſome extraordinary reſplendent brightneſs ſuddenly ſhining upon him. As with two of their wings they flie, yea weary themſelves, as it were, with eager flight to do us any good office, as Gabriel did to the Prophet Daniel, with the Meſſage of the Meſſiah: Theodoret elegantly ſets forth their imploiment about God and his people in two words, ὑμνῶν καὶ διακονῶν, 1 They ſing praiſe to God. Iob 38. 7. Iſa. 6. 3. Heb. 1. 6. whom they perfectly know and love, and therefore perfectly adore and honour. 2. They miniſter (whole myriads of them) both to him and us, Dan. 7. 10. and do his will for our good, Pſal, 103. 20. rejoycing more in their names of office then of honour, of imploiment then preferment, to be called Angels (that is, meſſengers) then Principalities, Thrones, Dominations, Epheſ. 1. 20. Accounting it better prodeſſe quam præeſſe, to do good, then to be great, to diſpenſe Gods benefits to the Saints then to enjoy them themſelves. Hence they are with and about the Saints as their companions, guides, protectors, monitors, and rulers of their actions. Zech. 3. 2 So did Gabriel at Zacharies right-hand, as he was offering incenſe, to enform and comfort him, Luke 1. 11. This they do ſtill, though inviſibly and inſenſibly (that God might draw up our hearts heaven ward, and teach us to have our converſation above, though our commoration be here beneath.) Devils are not ſo ready to tempt and devour us, as the Angels are to help and deliver us: as evil Angels ſuggeſt temptations, ſo do good Angels holy motions. And as our good endeavours are oft hindred by Satan, ſo are our evil by the Angels: elſe, were not our protection equal to our danger, and we could neither ſtand nor riſe. The Devil moved Balaam to go (God bad him go if he thought good, as Solomon bids the young man, Follow the waies of his own heart) a good Angel reſiſts him, and ſpeaks in the mouth of his aſs to convince him. If an heavenly ſpirit (ſaith one) ſtand in the way of a ſorcerers ſins, how much more ready are all theſe ſpiritual powers to ſtop the miſcarriage of Gods deareſt children? How oft had we fallen yet more, had not theſe guardians upheld us, whether by removing occaſions, or caſting in good inſtincts? Michael oppoſed Satan about the body of Moſes: ſo do the Angels ſtill about the bodies and ſouls of the Saints, while they are alive. As when they are dead, they preſently convey their ſouls into Abrahams boſom thorow the Devils territories, and in deſpite of him, for he is the Prince of the air. And for their bodies, they ſhall gather them together at the laſt day from the uttermoſt part of the earth, to the uttermoſt part of heaven, Mark 13. 27.

2. The elect are marked from the reſt, Ezek. 9. and ſhall ſoon be diſcerned, if by nothing elſe, yet by the lightſomneſs of their looks, and lifting up of their heads, for their redemption draws nigh. Whereas the wicked ſhall look gaſtly and ruefully, the Devil claiming his own, and theſe mens hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after thoſe things which are coming upon them, Luke 21. 16. Then ſhall they be everlaſtingly ſhamed, Dan. 12. 2. and ſentenced, Mat. 25. 41. Neither helps it, that they are a multitude: for Chriſt comes with thouſands of his Angels, to do execution, to bundle up the tares and caſt them into the fornace. Now if Ezekiel, Daniel, John, &c. (men that had good cauſes and conſciences) did ſo tremble before one Angel, coming with good tidings in a leſſer manifeſtation of Chriſts glory; what then ſhall theſe do, when Chriſt cometh to judgement, and when he viſiteth, what will they anſwer? &c.

C*Onesit quod natura est, negavit quod culpæ*, saith Ambrose upon these words, and after him Cassiodore. It is not evil (saith one) to marry, but good to be wary; So neither is it a sin to be angry, but hard not to sin when we are angry. Anger is a tender vertue, and such as by reason of our unskilfulness may be easily corrupted and made dangerous. He that in his anger would not sin, must not be angry at any thing but sin. Our Saviour was angry with Peter, and angry with the Pharisees for the hardness of their hearts. Moses was even blown up with holy anger at the people for the golden Calf: and Gods blessing on every good heart, that, in such a case, hath a stomack for God. Meekness surely here would be no better then mopishness, and not so good as madness. Do not I hate them that hate thee? I hate them with a perfect hatred, saith David, I count them mine enemies. This is the anger of zeal, found in Phineas, Elias, Elisha, our Saviour: and should have been found in Adam toward his wife, in Eli towards his sons, in Lot toward his servants, &c. It must have a good rise, and a good end, saith Bucer; else it becomes a mortal, not a venial sin, as the Papists fondly conclude from Mat. 5. 22. Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause, &c. There is a just cause then of anger; sin, as an offence to God (here Nebuchadnezzar was out, Dan. 3. 19.) And there must be a just measure observed, that our Anger for sin render us not unfit either to pitty the sinner (as our Saviour in his anger did the obstinate Pharisees) or to pray for him (as Moses for those idolaters he was so enraged at, Exod. 32. 31, 32.) Anger that is not thus bounded is but a momentary madness, saith the Heathen, it resteth in the bosom of fools, saith Solomon, whether it be Bilis, iracundia, aut infensio (for into those three degrees Damascen distinguisheth it) Anger, Wrath, and Hatred; The one (saith he) hath beginning and motion, but presently ceaseth; the other taketh deep hold in the memory; the third desisteth not without revenge. Clichtoveus compareth the first to fire in stubble: the second to fire in iron; the third to fire that is hid, and never bewrayeth it self, but with the ruine of the matter wherein it hath caught. Some are sharp, some are bitter, a third kinde are implacable, saith Aristotle. The first are the best, that as children are soon angry, and as soon pleased again. Be ye children in malice, 1 Cor. 14. 20. Ursinus was of somewhat a hasty nature; So also was Calvin, Ut fit in ejusmodi ingeniis saith he that writes their lives. For as any man is more industrious and ingenuous, so he teacheth more teachily and painfully. Yet had they so learned to moderate their anger, as not to utter a word in in their passion, unbeseeming a Christian. But of Beza, his Colegues would often say, That like the Dove he was ἀχόλος, without a gall. And it should seem so by that which he writes of himself in a certain Epistle to Mr. Calvin: The Jesuite (saith he) disputing about the Eucharist, called us Vulpes, & serpentes, & simias, foxes, serpents, apes, &c. My answer was this, Nos non magis credere quàm Transubstantiationem, That we believed all that as much as we did Transubstantiation. So Giles of Brussels Martyr, when the Friers (sent to reduce him) did any time mis-call him, he ever held his peace; insomuch that those blasphemers would say abroad, that he had a dumb devil in him. Cassianus reports, that when a certain Christian was held captive of infidels, tormented with divers pains and ignominious taunts, bring demanded by way of scorn and reproach, Tell us what miracle thy Christ hath done? He answered, He hath done What you see, that I am not moved at all the cruelties and contumelies you cast upon me. This was indeed to walk as Christ walked, who did not strive, nor cry, nor did any man hear his voice in the streets, who when he was reviled, reviled not again, when he suffered, he threatned not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously. So did Moses, when murmured against by Aaron and Miriam. He was meek and complained not; therefore without any delation of his, the Lord struck in for him. The less any man strives for himself, the more is God his Champion. But the wrath of man as it worketh not the righteousness of God, so it prevents his justice: Wherefore be slow to wrath, saith S. James, as God is not fretful and froward as the devil is. Anger is a short devil, saith Chrysostom, the fury of the unclean spirit, Qui suis follibus & flatibus intendit, who enflames the heart, sets the tongue on fire from hell, makes it hotter then Nebuchadnezzars oven, so that he cares not what he speaks, as Jonas; what he does as Saul; who falling into a rage, the devil possest him, and kindled such a fire as could not be quenched, till he fell into the unquenchable lake. So true is that of Eliphaz. Wrath killeth the foolish man, delivers him to the destroyer, if it rest in his bosom especially, and lodge a night with him, which is the second degree above mentioned.

Mat. 12. 19. 1 Pet. 2. 23.

Jam. 1. 19. 20. Rom. 12. 18. Give place to wrath. 1. To the wrath of God, which by revenge ye prevent. Brevis dæmon. Lob 5 2.

Let not therefore the Sun go down upon your wrath; for that is all one as to give place to the devil, who hereby entreth the heart, and takes possession. Many there are that suffer the Sun not only to go down upon their anger, but to run his whole race, yea many races, ere they can be reconciled: whereby their anger becomes inveterate, and turns into malice: for anger and malice differ but in age. Now cursed be this anger, for it is fierce; and this wrath, for it is cruel, Gen. 49. 7. It is the murder of the heart, Mat. 5. 21, &c. the fountain of the murder both of the tongue and hand. Hence it is said, He that hateth his brother is a man-slaier. He is so in desire, he would be so indeed, if he durst. Were there a sword in my hand, I would surely slay thee. There is a passion of hatred (saith one) and there is the habit of it. The former is a kinde of averseness and rising of the heart against a man, when one sees him, so that he cannot away with him, nor speak to, nor look courteously or peaceably upon him; but ones countenance fals when he sees him, and he even turns away, and, by his good-will would have nothing to do with him; This is the passion of hatred. The habit of it is, when the heart is so settled in this alienation and estrangement, that it grows to wish and desire, and seek his hurt; Yea to rejoyce and glory when it can effect it; as Iosephs brethren, who sate down to eat and drink, when they had cast him into the pit: as Lamech, who boasted of his man-hood this way (dog-hood rather, for revenge is no better) as Alexander Pheræus, who consecrated the Javelin, wherewith he slew Polyphron.

This is that third and worst sort of anger, which, being smothered, will languish: but let out, will flame into further mischief, as we see in Esau, who vowed his brothers death, and Cain who wrought it. But that I believe and know (said Frier Brusierd in a conference with Bilney) that God and all his Saints will take revengement everlasting on thee, I would surely with these nails of mine be thy death. We read also of a like saying of another Frier Augustine of Antwerp, testified by Erasmus in his Epistles; who openly in the Pulpit at Antwerp, preaching to the people, wished that Luther were there, that he might bite out his throat with his teeth. So doing he would nothing doubt to resort to the altar with the same bloody teeth, and receive the body of Christ. and was worthily hang'd for his treason, anno 1571. Being herein like the foolish Bee, who loseth her life to get revenge. Valerius Maximus could not tell whether Sylla or his anger were first extinguished. William the Conquerour to be revenged on the King of France (who being young and lusty, jeasted at his great belly, whereof he said he lay in at Roven) entered France in the chiefest time of their fruits, making spoil of all in his way, till he came even to Paris (where the King of France then was) to shew him of his up-sitting. And from thence he marches to the City of Mants, which he utterly sackt, and in the destruction thereof got his own by the strain of his horse among the breaches, so ending his wars and his life together. His successour Edward the first did not so; For going against Bruce King of Scots, he adjured his son and Nobles, that if he dyed in his journey, they should carry his corps with them about Scotland, and not suffer it to be interred till they had vanquished the usurper, and absolutely subdued the Countrey. A desire more Martial then Christian, shewing a minde so bent to the world, that he would not make an end when he had done with it; and so set upon revenge, that he designs it beyond his life. Sed ira mortalium debet esse mortalis, saith Lactantius. Are we mortal, and shall our anger be immortal? The rede rage of the rebels in Kets conspiracy was such, that some being disabled almost to hold up their weapons, would strive what they could to strike their enemies. Others being thrust thorow the body with a spear, would run themselves further to reach those that wounded them deadly. So sweet is revenge to corrupt nature; Tamar will defile her self with incest, to be even with her father in law Judah; Absolom will run any hazard to have his peny-worths on Amnon; David desperately swore the death of Nabal and his houshold by such an hour. To be revenged is more honourable then to be reconciled, saith Aristotle. This is the voice of nature, and thus the spirit that is in us lusteth to envy; but the Scripture giveth more grace, teacheth us better things, speaketh to us. Abigail did to David, when he was marching furiously, Then shall it be no grief unto thee, nor offence of minde to have bridled thy passions, and to have held thy hand from blood. Nay, it shall be a singular comfort to have bridled thy passions (For the meek shall encrease their joy in the Lord) and a sweat seal of our spiritual sonship, that we are the children of our heavenly Father, yea that we are perfect as he is perfect, and can do that which a natural man cannot, as Saul acknowledgeth. Elisha feasteth his enemies and is freed of them; the bands of Syria come no more into the bounds of Israel. Absolom invites Amnon, and Alexander Philotas to a feast, to kill them thereat. But Isaac expostulates the wrong with Abimelech and his company, forgives them, feasts them, and hath them his friends for ever. This was a noble revenge, and fit for Christian imitation. Joshua marcheth all day, and fights all night for the Gibeonites, that had so deceived him. Cranmers gentleness in pardoning wrongs was such, that it grew to a Proverb, Doe my Lord of Canterbury a shrewd turn, and then you shall be sure to have him your friend whiles he liveth. He never raged so far with any of his houshould servants, as once to call the meanest of them varlet or knave in anger, much less to reprove a stranger with any reproachful word. Here was a perfect man, as S. James defines him, that can rule his tongue in his passions especially, which once aflote are very violent, and (like heavy bodies down steep-hils) once in motion move themselves and know no ground but the bottom.

Lib. 9. c. 3.

The life of K. Edward 6. by Sir John Heyw. p. 72.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1692.

James 3. 2.

1. Helps to repress rash anger.

Pro. 30. 32, 33. If thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thy self (by any froward look or gesture) or if thou hast thought evil (by meditating revenge, yet) lay thy hand upon thy mouth, silence thy self. Surely the churning of milk bringeth forth butter, and the wringing the nose bringeth forth blood; so the forcing of wrath (the uttering of it) bringeth forth strife.

First, Cease therefore from anger, and refrain strife, fret not thy self in any wise to do evil, Psal. 37. 8. Thou dost evil in fretting, thou shalt doe worse in venting, and suffering the fire to break out as David did, Psal. 39. When therefore thou findest thy self incensed and chafing ripe, presently lay a necessity of silence upon thy self, till thou be able to speak quietly and composedly, till the heat be somewhat over: as Ahasuerosh walked a while in his garden, ere he would pass sentence upon Haman. Another repeated the Greek Alphabet, ere he would say or do any thing in his anger. He doth better that repeateth some grave sentences of Scripture, such as is this, Be angry; but sin not; Be slow to wrath; Avenge not your selves, but give place to wrath; Submit to God, resist the devil and he will flie from you. This devil of anger, if thus resisted by Scripture, will surely flie, he cannot bide by it, Mat. 4. Especially if we set our selves to pray it down, as David did, Psal. 39. When Iob brake out and was waspish, Surely, said Eliphaz, thou restrainest prayer, else it would never be thus, with thee.

Second-

Secondly, Get thy heart purified by faith. For faith makes patience. When the Disciples heard that they must forgive till seventy times seven times in a day, Lord, say they, encrease our faith. The wisdom from above is first pure, and then peaceable. James 3.17. But, from whence are wars and contentions amongst you? (as it is in the next verse) Are they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? These make you unquiet and out of order within; and hence it is that you are so froward and discontented with others. The wicked are as the raging sea, troublesome and tumultuous; the covetous person troubleth his whole house. Nabal was such a son of Belial, so fierce and furious that there was no speaking to him: Yea, David when he had defiled his conscience, and not yet repented of his adultery and murder, how rigid was he, or rather cruel in his handling of the Ammonites, in reckoning his teen upon them for the misusage of his Embassadours? He put them under saws and harrows of iron, he made them pass through the bric-kiln, &c. The devils are most impure, and therefore most malicious: Christ on the other side, most pure, and therefore most gentle. Of the encrease of his government and peace there shall be no end, saith Isaiah: teaching us, that the more Christs government encreaseth in the soul, the more peace and peaceableness. But perverseness argues a breach in the spirit, Prov. 15. 4.

Ira fera est, sibunda, incantemus eam divinæ Scripturæ carminibus. Chrysost. Iob 15. 4. Acts 15. 9. Luke 17. 5. Isa. 47. 1 Sam. 25. 2 Sam. 12. 30, 31. Isa. 9. 7.

Thirdly, Study to be quiet, and do your own business. Meddle not with the strife that belongs not to you, lest you take a dog by the ears, Prov. 26. 17. Shun contentious company, Prov. 22. 24. for like mad dogs, they bite and make others as mad as themselves. Drink not, game not, lest thou meet with contentions, Prov. 23. 29, 30. Listen not to the tale-bearer, for he seperates even very friends. Enquire not into other folks faults. Seldom is a patient man inquisitive, or an inquisitive man patient. Solomon would not have one lay his ear as an eavesdropper, to every word is spoken, lest he hear his servant cursing him, Eccles. 7. 21. and so he should fall to hate him, and vex himself to no purpose. Presume in thy minde, that many things are to be suffered, while we are here; which whoso cannot frame to do, it is but time for him to make up his pack, and be gone out of the world; for here is no being for him. Many things also are to be dissembled and winked at, as the lion takes no notice of the barking of curs, as Physicians pass by the petulancies of their Patients. Pils must be swallowed down whole, not chewed; so injuries. Thus, by the meekness of wisdom, prevent occasions of anger; It doth require much study to live quietly.

3. 2 Thes. 4. 12. Prov. 17. 9. Non vis esse iracundus? ne sis curiosus. Sen.

Non indignantur ægrotis, sed morbos sanant. Erasm.

Fourthly, Consider, 1. The deformity of anger. 2. The disgrace. And 3. the danger of it. First, What an ugly thing is anger, dispossessing a man of his soul (which is possessed by patience) and disfiguring his body with fierceness of the eyes, furiousness of the looks, distortion of the face, inflammation of the nostrils? The Hebrews call anger Aph, because therein the nose riseth: the colour changeth, the tongue stammereth, the teeth gnash, the hands clap (as Balacks, Numbers 24. 10.) the feet stamp, the pulse beats, the heart pants, the whole man swels like a toad, glows like a devil, tormenting himself before his time, whence many heathens have advised the angry man to look his face in a glass, and so grow ashamed of his distemper. Next for the disgrace; The holy Ghost hath stigmatized the angry person for a fool in grain, such an one as exalts folly, sets it up on high to be seen of all, and proclaims himself a Fool; yea the worst of fools; for, Proud, haughty, scorner is his name that dealeth in proud wrath; That is his title. Thus God loads such a man with disgrace. And whereas he thinks by his big looks and high terms to carry it among men (as Lamech did) when he hath gotten revenge especially; the Apostle purposely disgraceth revenge of injury by a word that signifies disgrace, losse of victory, or impotency of minde. And indeed it is unmanlyness of spirit, and little wit in the head, that causeth a great deal of passion in the heart, as we see in infants and sick people. Thunder, hail, tempest, neither trouble nor hurt the celestial bodies: no more doth anger great minds. The tops of some mountains are said to be so high above the middle region of the air, that not so much as the dust of them is moved out of the place from years end to years end: So is it here. Great spirits, and men of understanding are like the upper region, in a perpetual serenity: or at least, like the highest planets, that of all the rest are thought to be slowest in course, or like a diamond that is neither bruised nor cut. And lastly, for the danger of anger, it consumes the body, it confounds the soul. Fevers, colicks, palsies, plurisies, apoplexies, inflammations, consumptions are caused by it, whiles it dries up the radical moisture moisture (that ballsom of the body) boils the heart into brine, and viper like, makes an end of the owner: who as he lived undesired, so he dies unlamented, as Nerva, Valentinian, and other cholerick Kings and persons of great note, who hereby have wrought their own ruth and ruine. And for the poor soul, it is indisposed by unadvised anger for prayer or any other duty to God or man. He is laid open, as unwalled City, to many sins, mischiefs and miseries (Iames 3. 16. Prov, 3. 32. and 7. 13. and 29. 22. Psal. 27, 8.) temporal, spiritual and eternal, Prov. 17. 20. Mat. 5. 21. He that lives and dies in this fury, becomes a prey to the furies of hell.

1 Pet. 3. 7. James 1. 19, 20, 21. Eph. 4. 30, 31.

5. Fifthly, Consider wisely of Gods providence, presence, patience.

First, That those that wrong us (how malicious or mischievous soever) are the instruments of his good providence, for our greatest good; Why then should we be angry at them? Is not this to be angry at God? Now if he could say, No wise man will be angry with the people of Rome, because of their power; how much greater folly is it to rage at God? If he be angry with us, there is hope of mercy; but if we be angry with him, what help is there, let his wrath be kindled never so little? This reined in Iob from letting flie at the Caldeans, that robb'd him, and David at Shimei that reviled him. And had he well seen God in Nabal, as he did in Shimei, he had never been so outragious. Reverence therefore Gods providence, and be still, Psal. 39. 10. None could have power against thee, except it were given them from above, Iohn 19. 11. Next, Consider Gods presence, and be careful. Set God before thy passions, and they will be soon husht, as unruly fellows that are quarrelling, when once an officer comes in amongst them. When the heart boils with wrath and desire of revenge; say as those Disciples, Luke 9. 54. Wilt thou that we call for fire from heaven? Ask leave of God, ere you dare to do any thing that way, and presume not to be thine own carver. We use to say, If the Magistrate be not present, we may offend one another to defend our selves; But if the Magistrate be present, there is no excuse. Behold the Iudge stands before the door (saith S. Iames) grudge not therefore, groan not, grunt not one against another; You cannot shew the least token of impatiency, but he is an eye-witness of it; Now will ye not tremble at my presence, saith the Lord? Iob though patient at first, yet when once vext to the skin, fals a roaring and raving, and there was no hoe with him; Till at length God steps forth, as it were from behinde the hangings, over-hearing him, and takes him up roundly, Chap. 38. 2. Who is this, says he, that talks thus? how now? After which, Iob laid his hand upon his mouth, and we hear no more of him. Consider lastly, Gods infinite patience and long-sufferance in bearing mens manners, as he did theirs in in the wilderness. How slow is he to anger, and plenteous in mercy! He will not always chide, though always provoked: neither will he keep his anger for ever. God judgeth the righteous (but very gently, and in the midst of judgement he remembreth mercy) God also is angry with the wicked (or angred by them) every day. But what will he do in his anger? If he turn not, he will whet his sword before it devour flesh. He first takes hold on judgement) before his judgement takes hold on men:) He hath bent his bow and made it ready, &c. Psalm 7. 12, 13. We read of Gods bow, saith Ambrose, set in the cloud, but nothing of his arrow. The bow cannot hurt us, but the bow fore-warns us of the arrow; and the string of the bow is to us-ward, to shew how unwilling God is to punish even the wicked. He must first turn the bow, and then he bends his bow, and then his arrow is unprepared too, vers. 14. So unready and unwilling is he to afflict, to grieve the children of men. He calls it his work, his strange work; he goes not about it till there be no remedy, 2 Chron. 36. 16. When God came to punish Adam, he came slowly, and in the cool of the day. He ran not upon him, as David did upon Goliah, and cut off his head, but with a softly pace and still voice, and not till the evening. And then convents him, before the sentence (which he would not do for the devil) and promiseth him a Saviour from the deadly sting of that old serpent. Oh look upon this pattern of patience, as they did once upon the brazen serpent, and it will cure our hearts when stung with impatiency. Adam was the master-piece of Gods handy-work, in whom he rested and rejoyced; adorn'd him with his own image, advanced him to dominion over all other sublunary creatures, honoured him with the possession of Paradise, and possibility of heaven, held himself so far honoured by him, as that he is not called Lord God, till man was created. But man being in honour, continued not one night (as it is thought) but became like the beasts that perish; nay worse, like the devils devils, with whom he should have perished, had he not dealt with a sin pardoning God, none ever like him, Mic. 7. 18. He still multiplies pardons, as we multiply provocations, and stretcheth out his hand all the day long to a rebellious people, Isa. 65. 2 his grace even kneels to them beseeching them to be reconciled, and bearing with such abominable practises, in the mean while, as the meekest Moses that ever breathed would never bear with, if in his room, but even for an hour; If we consider especially how infinitly great he is and mighty, armed with power at his will. For the Lord our God is God of Gods, and Lord of Lords, a great God, a mighty and a terrible, Deut. 10. 17. Now the higher any person is, the less patient of wrongs. How rigidly dealt David with the Ammonites, for the abuse done to his Embassadors? And when the people stoned Adoram, that was over the tribute, Rehoboam gathered all Judah and Benjamin to fight with them. If God should be as short-spirited, what would soon become of all? Let a man but put up an injury once or twice from another, and he hath himself highly in admiration, and in his own conceit deserves to be chronicled, nay canonized for a Saint, as our Henry the sixth had like to have been for this very vertue. One of his successors (King Henry the seventh) laboured it, saith the Historian, and had obtained to have done it, had not the charges thereof, that so far exceeded mediocrity, caused him to leave it undone. Of this King it is reported, That in both estates he so demeaned himself, that he modestly carried the one, and moderately under-went the other: Passion at no time drowning his judgement, nor will at any time domineering over his reason: yea such was his deportment, that the inconstancy of his estate could not alter the constancy of his mind. He was never heard to swear oath (which David did in his heat, 1 Sam. 25. 22.) his greatest asseveration being for most part, Forsooth, forsooth, or verily, verily. His patience was such, that to one that struck him, when he was taken prisoner, he only said, Forsooth you do wrong your self more then me, to strike the Lords Anointed. Another that had drawn blood of him, when he was in prison he freely pardoned (when restored) saying, Alas poor soul, he struck me more to win favour with others, then of any ill will he bare me. Of that happy memory, that he never forgat any thing but injury. This was a fair president, and hardly matcht again in a man of his place, and living in those dark times of gross Popery, For the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty, saith the Psalmist. But what is all this to Gods infinite patience in suffering wrong, and long too? not from the vessels of wrath only, Rom. 9 22. but his own elect, who should be better, sparing them as a man spares his son that serves him, forgiving them seventy times seven times in a day, passing by without grievance, a world of infirmities, yea taking advantage of their backslidings to shew them the more mercy, as Hos. 2. 13. The deep and due consideration of this patience in God, will greatly patient our spirits, and transform us into the same image, as it did that Ethiopian Eunuch, Acts 8. 32. and that Earl called Elzearus, of whom it is storied, that, being much given to immoderate anger, the means he used to cure this disordered affection, was by studying of Christ, and of his patience. This meditation he never suffered to pass from him, before he found his heart transform'd and conform'd to the heavenly patern.

Lastly, If to these means and meditations you add a constant endeavour to become low in your own eyes, keeping the strict watch of the Lord over your heart, taking your self in the manner when impatience begins to boyl in you: And if you heartily pray down your passions, arraigning and condemning them in Gods presence, and desiring him to do execution, you shall soon see that this your labour is not in vain in the Lord. 6.

APOSTASIE.

MATH. 24. 12, 13.

And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved.

Ludolf. de vita Christ. l. 2. c. 87

IT is well observed concerning those two destructions of the world, that as the first was by water for the heat of their lust, so the second shall be by fire for the coldness of their love. The deluge of iniquity shall quench the love of many. But he that endureth, &c. It is but a He in the singular number that holds out to the end. The most are of them that draw back to perdition, and not of them that believe to the saving of the soul, Heb. 1. 39. The opposition there imports that incredulity is the root of apostasie; that (I mean) whereby a man departs from the living God. It was laid to Luthers charge, that he was an apostate. He confesseth that he was an apostate, but a blessed and holy one: such as had not kept promise with the devil, but fallen off from him, and his Church malignant. The like imputation the Papists laid upon those famous Italian converts, Zanchius, Peter Martyr, Paulus Vergerius the Popes Nuncio, who began to write a book Adversus Apostatas Germania (that was the rule) against the Lutheran apostates: but by searching into their tenets, with purpose to confute them, was converted by them, and leaving his Bishoprick, and that whole Synagogue of Satan, lived and died a painful and powerful Preacher of Gods truth in Germany. Galeacius Caracciolus also an Italian Marquess, and nephew to Pope Paul the fifth, hearing Peter Martyr read upon the 1 epist. to the Corinths, was converted by him, and leaving all went to Geneva. Where when he was afterwards tempted by a Jesuite to revolt for money, he cried out, Let their money perish with them, who esteem all the gold in the world worth one daies society with Jesus Christ and his holy Spirit. And cursed be that Religion for ever, that seeks by money to corrupt mens minds from the simplicity of Christ. The Papists do at this day propose rewards to such as shall relinquish the Protestant religion, and turn to theirs: as in Austborough where they say there is a known price for it of ten Florens a year: In France, where the Clergy have made contributions for the maintenance of runagate Ministers, such as were Bolsecus (whom the Papists afterwards hired to write Calvins life, where so many lines, so many lyes)

Baldwin

Baldwin that notable turn-coat, that changed his religion three or four times at least for advantage, and died at last of envy that another was preferred before him as Chaplain to Henry the third of France, when he went to take possession of the Kingdom of Polonia: Petrus Carolus, that odious apostate, and troubler of the true Church: Staphylus, Speiserus, Brissonettus, and others long agone; As of late, Bertius, Tileanus, Spalatensis, and many other renegadoes, re-entred by the unclean spirit, who made their last state worse then the first, as the Jaylour lays load of iron on him that escaped, Luke 11. 26. These, as they sin not common sins; so, for most part (as it is said of Korah, and his company) they die not common deaths; they seldom escape the visible vengeance of God whom they have forsaken; witness Arrius, Julian, Valerian, Spira, Spalatensis, Judge Hales, Guarlacus, Bomelius, Latomus Lovaniensis, who to his end had nothing else in his mouth but that he was damned, and rejected of God, and that there was no hope of salvation for him, because that wittingly against his conscience, he withstood the manifest truth of his Word. Yea, those that never went so far as to persecute the truth, but denied or dissembled it only, have fearfully perished. In the story of Philbert Hamlin Martyr, a certain Priest, his host whom he had instructed in the truth, revolted. To whom he prophecied, That nevertheless he should die before him. He had no sooner spoke the word, but the Priest going out of the prison from Hamlin, was slain by two Gentlemen, who had a quarrel to him. Whereof when Hamlin heard, he affirmed, He knew of no such thing, but only spake as God guided his tongue. Likewise we read of William Welsey Martyr, that when he went to execution, he left six shillings eight pence to be delivered to one Richard Denton a Smith, dwelling at Wells in Cambridgeshire, with this commendation, That he marvelled that he tarried so long behinde him, seeing he was the man that first delivered him the book of the Scripture into his hand, and told him that it was the truth, desiring him to make haste after as fast as he could; Denton at the receipt of it, answered, I confess it is true; but alas I cannot burn. But he could not burn in the cause of Christ, was afterwards burned against his will, when Christ had given peace to his Church. For anno 1594. on Tuesday. April. 14. his house was set on fire; And whilest he went in to save his goods he lost his life, with two other in the same house. Among the Angrognians and their neighbours in France, it is certainly known, that those that yeelded to the adversaries were more cruelly handled then the others that continued constant to the death. See how God hateth apostates. When Caracciolus Marquess of Vicum, resolved to leave all, and go to Geneva, he opened his minde to some of his most familiar friends, and wrought upon them so far, as they promised and vowed to accompany him, &c. But divers of them, who for a time seemed to be led with a more earnest zeal of Gods glory in this action, when they came to the borders of Italy, and considered what they forlook, first began to look back, afterwards went back again indeed. Where purposing to serve God in their pleasures and in the midst of Popery, they were, after, taken by the Spanish Inquisition, &c. Others have fallen under a worse torment, the terrour of their own consciences, which they were not able to stand before; As I might instance not only in Bilney, who, after he had born his fagot, was so terrified that his friends were afraid to let him be alone: If they brought him comfortable places of Scripture, it was as though a man should run him through the heart with a sword, as Latimer testifieth. In Bainham who could not rest til he had publikely recanted his recantation, praying every body rather to die then to do as he had done; for he would not feel such a hell again as he did feel for all the worlds good; In James Abbes, who having yielded to the Bishop of Norwich his perswasions, and received a piece of money from him, was piteously vexed, till he went again to the Bishop, and there threw him his money, and said, It repented him that he ever consented to their wicked perswasions; In Thomas Whittle Martyr, who could never be quiet till he had gone to the Bishops office, and tore the bill of his recantation, for the which Bonner first buffeted him soundly, and then burnt him; In Thomas Bambridge, who feeling the intolerable heat of the fire, cried out, I recant, and subscribed to certain Popish Articles at the stake upon a mans back, and so was led back to prison. But soon after he retracted what he had subscribed, and the same day seven night he was burnt indeed, or rather broiled by the vile tormentours. The like befel Richard Sharp a Weaver of Brifton, who likewise suffered for that truth, which he had retracted, saying, I am sorry that ever I denied my Lord God, &c. But besides all these that recovered

He that betrayed the Rhodes was well ſerved. For his promiſed wife and portion were preſented; But the Turk told him, that he would not have a Chriſtian to be his ſon-in law, but he muſt be a Muſulman, that is, a believing Turk both within and without; And therefore he cauſed his baptized skin (as he called it) to be taken off,

But the wicked wretch ended his life with ſhame and ſorrow. Theoderick an Arrian King, did exceedingly affect a certain Deacon, although an orthodox. This Deacon thinking to ingratiate and get preferment, became an Arrian, which when the King underſtood, he changed his love into hatred, and cauſed the head to be ſtruck from him, affirming, That if he kept not his faith to God, what duty could one expect from ſuch a perſon? rent Articles. After this, they are circumcised and do put on a new turbant, as a badge of a Muſulman or right believer. We read of two Dutch men (the one a Divine, the other a Baker) that became Mahometans not many years ſince; upon what diſcontent or other motive, I know not. The Miniſters name was Adam Neuſſerus, once a Paſtor of Heidelberg, who fell off firſt to Arrianiſm, and then to Turciſm. He died miſerably at Conſtantinople, Octob. 12. Anno 1576. (much in the ſame manner as Arminius did at Leyden, who was grievouſly tormented with a cough, gout, ague, and inceſſant pain in his belly, with a great binding and ſtopping under the heart, which cauſed much difficulty of breathing. He ſlept alſo very unquietly, and could not digeſt his meat, &c.) But to return from whence I am digreſſed; This Neuſſer when he came to die, was thus comforted by the Baker above-ſaid, and other his friends, Be of good cheer, brother, we ſhall meet again in Paradiſe, where we will drink with you, and take large carouſes. As for the Dutch Baker that turned Turk, his name was Joh: Ferber, once of Basknang in the Dutchy of Wurtemburg: and when the Emperour of Germany his Embaſſadors came to Conſtantinople with preſents to Sultan Selymus, as they entred the Turks palace, amidſt many thouſand Turks, one of the multitude cried out in the Dutch tongue, Of what religion are you? Which is the firſt queſtion in the Dutch Catechiſm. The Embaſſadors wondered at the words, and found out afterwards who it was: and that by thoſe words he jeared and derided the Chriſtian religion. So did not the King of Morocco above mentioned: for talking with King Johns Embaſſadors, he told them, that he had lately read Pauls epiſtles, which he liked ſo well, that were he now to chuſe his religion, he would before another, embrace Chriſtianity. But every one, ſaith he, ought to die in his own religion: and the leaving of the faith wherein he was born, was the only thing that he diſliked in that Apoſtle. This was his Heatheniſh conceit of that elect veſſel, who himſelf counted it a ſingular mercy, and worthy of all thanks, that he had grace to change his religion, I was a blaſphemer, ſaith he, a perſecutor and injurious: but I obtained mercy, becauſe I did it ignorantly: for elſe it had been the unpardonable ſin, as Ferbers ſin might well be. Biſhop Latimer in a Sermon afore King Edward, tells of one who fell away from the known truth, and after fell to mocking and ſcorning it: yet in the end he was touched in conſcience for it. Beware of this ſin, ſaith he, for I have known no more but this that repented. What evil ſoever we do we can do nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth; ſaith S. Paul for himſelf, and all true Chriſtians. But apoſtates become altogether filthy, Pſal. 53. 3. None being worſe then thoſe that have been good, and are naught: and might be good, and yet will be naught; In their filthineſs is lewdneſs, their ſcum boils into them: It is with them, as in that caſe, Levit. 13. 18, 19, 20. If a man had a bile healed, and after brake out, it proved the plague of leproſie, he was utterly to be excluded. Theſe judge themſelves unworthy eternal life, unfit for Gods Kingdom, Luke 9. 63. they caſt themſelves into hell-mouth, Heb. 10. 39. where they are like to have the greater meaſure of torment, by how much they are fallen from greater hopes and likelihoods of heaven: as Adam, the more holineſs and happineſs he had, the greater was his ſin and miſery upon his fall.

But, beloved, we are perſwaded better things of you, and things that accompany ſalvation, though we thus ſpeak ſaith the Author to the Hebrews, after he had both bidden them beware of Apoſtaſie and chidden them for their non-proficiency, and to awaken them out of their lethargy, had ſet before them the curſed condition of ſuch as commit the unpardonable ſin, which begins in apoſtaſie, goes on in perſecution, and ends in blaſphemy. But this ſpot is not the ſpot of Gods children, as Moſes hath it. Fall they may fearfully, but not finally; they cannot poſſibly fall ſo low, but Gods holy hand is ſtill lower under them, to raiſe them up again. None can take them out of the Fathers hand: the Son loſeth none of thoſe that were given him by the Father, but the ſon of perdition, who was never of his body, though he ſeemed to be by reaſon of his office: And the holy-Ghoſt the Comforter adides with his for ever. He is called an earneſt, not a pawn. A pawn is to be returned again, but an earneſt is part and pledge of the whole bargain. The Papiſts teach a total and final falling from grace. The Lutherans are forced to grant a total (though they deny a final) leſt they ſhould be brought utterly to abjure that errour that they hold in common with the Papiſts concerning the efficatiouſneſs of the Sacraments. Bertius the Arminian ſets forth a book with this horrid horrid title, De Apostasia Sanctorum, and was therefore called by King James, bloody Bertius. They deny that the truly regenerate are certainly of the number of Gods elect, sith there is not (say they) so vast a gulf betwixt the regenerate and reprobate, but that they may pass over the one to other, so that reprobates may become regenerate, and believers unbelievers; for a time at least. An uncouth and uncomfortable Doctrine. Bellarmine saith, That which is true grace, veritate essentiæ only, may be lost, not that grace which is true veritate firmæ soliditatis. If by the former he understand common grace, by the latter, special grace, we are of the same judgement.

Lege D. Prideaux Lect. p. 191.

1. Common grace may come to nothing, whether it be such as fits a man for some particular calling only, as in Saul, 1 Sam. 16. 14. And those idle shepherds who lost their gifts, Zech. 11. 17. Or such as fits him for a common profession of religion only; A form of knowledge, Rom. 2. 20. and a form of godliness, 2 Tim. 3. 5. wherein a man may go far, doubtless, as Judas, Demas; do much for God as the stony ground; suffer much, and not shrink in the wetting, as the thorny ground: have a counterfeit of all saving graces, as the sorcerers of Ægypt had of Moses his miracles: be a ring-leader of all good exercises, as Joash was the first that complained of the negligence of his best Officers, in not repairing the Temple, &c. and yet be nothing in truth, and come to nothing at length, Heb. 6. 6, 7. 2 Pet. 2. 20.

2 Chron. 24. 4, 5, 6.

2. Special saving graces proper to the elect; and these are either radical, original, fundamental, serving to the being of a Christian, as faith, hope, charity: or secondary, flowing from these, and serving to his well-being only, as joy of faith, confidence of hope, zeal and fervour of love. These are, as it were, the lustre, shine and radiancy of the radical: the beams of the Sun, as those the body of the Sun; the leaves of the tree, as those the sap and substance; the back of steel, that may be put on or taken off the bow, &c. The later we may lose, and perhaps irrecoverably, Psal. 51. 12. Not so the former; for like the fire of the Sanctuary, and the good house-wifes candle, it never goes out. But though the reins be consumed, yet the root of the matter remaineth in Gods people, Job 19. 27, 28. A partial decay there may be even in fundamental graces, and that both inward (in the judgement, as the Galatians, and affections, as the Ephesians, Rev. 2. 4.) and also outward, the acts of grace may be remitted, the exercise abated, as an angry man for the time exerciseth not reason, nor a sleeping man motion. Yea it is a disputable question (saith one) whether any Christian (except he die soon after his conversion) do go stedfastly on from strength to strength, without some sensible decay of the inward power of the graces wherewith he is endued. Some good souls have so far declined, as Solomon, Samson, Asa, others, that it might be said of them, as Jacob said of Joseph, He is dead, some evil beast hath devoured him. David fell from the upper loft as Eutychus, and brake his bones. Jonas ran as far from God, as he could by land, and then took sea, &c. After this, he fell to justifie his former frowardness, and yet no castaway. Solomon was prodigal of his spiritual portion, and spent well nigh all; He did eat up the zeal of Gods house, that had once eaten him up; And he that had built a Temple to the living God for himself and Israel in Sion, built a Temple to Chemosh, in the mount of scandal, for his mistresses of Moab, in the very face of Gods house; For this, Bellarmine ranks and reckons him among reprobates, but very uncharitably. For, what if the water ebb, the babe not spring in the womb, the Sun be eclipsed, the tree withered in winter? What if Israel flie once or twice before the enemy? Shall they never return, recover, prevail, conquer? Is there not life in the root, A blessing in the branches? Isa. 65. 8. Is not Uzzah a King still, though a leper? And may not Nebuchadnezzar return to his Kingdom? If once we be a royal generation, our leprosies may deform us, not dethrone us. Still we shall have the right, and, at length, the possession of that glorious Kingdom, wherein we were invested from eternity. Samson fell so far, and (twenty years after he loved the Philistim-woman Judg. 15. 20. when certainly he had repented of that sin) he returned to Gaza, and went in to a harlot that we should hardly take him for a godly man, did we not find his name in the list of those Worthies, Heb. 11. But, like a tame Hawk, though he flew far, yet he came to hand again. So will all that belong to God; recover they shall of their relapses, though with difficulty, yet sometimes with advantage; As a bone will knit, after breaking; as a passenger makes more haste after wandering. They may be as dear to Christ afterwards as

as ever. Go tell my Disciples and Peter: He must know with the first, that his Lord was risen, notwithstanding his shameful denyal of him. Thou art beautiful, O my love, as Tirzah, &c. saith Christ to his Spouse, after she had back-slidden and recovered: as amiable she was in his eyes in every point, as she had been before her fall: her hair, teeth, temples, as fair and well-featured as ever. He hates putting away, having married his Hephzibah to him in faithfulness. He sends for us by his Spirit in our out-straies, and looks us up again, as is sweetly set forth in the Parable of the lost groat, the lost sheep, the lost son. He knows that at our worst we are not forsakers of the Covenant, Dan. 11. 30. Wicked doers, verse 32. Withdrawers to destruction, Heb. 10. ult. They sleep, but their heart waketh that belong to God; they slumber with the wise Virgins, but yet their lamps are burning: The spiritual life runs to the heart, and leaves the outward man destitute; yet, as there are some pulses that discover life in the sickest; so is it here. These two never fail on Gods part his love which is unchangeable, and his grace a fruit of his love. And two on our part, the impression of that love, and the gracious work of the new creature. Christ never dies in his people, no more then he doth, or can do at the right hand of his Father. He hath both praid and procured that our faith fail not. Impostors shall deceive, if it were possible, the very elect. Possible it is respectu rei, non respectu Dei. Grace in it self is losable, but we are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, saith Saint Peter out of his own experience. And his counsel afterwards is very good. Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye being also led away with the errour of the wicked, fall from your own stedfastness: But grow in grace, &c.

First, Hearken not to Impostors and seducers, they wax worse and worse (and make others to do so too) deceiving and being deceived. By their pithanology and pretended humility, Colos. 2. 18. these locusts, with their womens faces, insinuate and deceive the hearts of the simple. Thus Jacobus Sadoletus (a man of a strict life and excellent learning) wrote most eloquent and perswasive letters, Desideratissimis suis (as he calleth them) To his most affectionately desired friends, the Senators and Commoners of Geneva: wherein he left nothing unsaid, whereby he might allure them to return again into the bosom of that Whore of Rome. The like art was used, whiles there was any hope, to the late famous Queen Elizabeth. Placilla the Empress, when Theodosius senior desired to confer with Eunonius dissuaded her husband very earnestly: lest being perverted by his speeches, he might fall into heresie.

Secondly, He that will hold out to the end, must lay a good foundation of humiliation, dig deep enough at first, and cast up all the loose earth, that his house may stand. His repentance must be sincere, universal, constant, such as whereby the heart may be renewed; for the old heart will not hold out the hardship of holiness; when it comes to suffering especially, but will leap out of the fire, as a Chesnut that hath not been crackt at the top: And as the stony ground, the seed straightway started up, and as soon withered, because not well rooted. The good ground is noted to bring forth fruit with patience, or tarriance for the fit season. Leap-Christians are not much to be liked, that all on the sudden of notorious profane become extreamly precise and scrupulous. Violent motions are not permanent. Aguish fits breed flushings; blazing Comets sooneſt fall, hasty curs bite least, heady horses quickly tire Hot at hand seldom holds out. That trumpets sound in the mount was louder and louder; the wind (whereto true grace is compared, John 3.) riseth higher and higher; The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Not like Joshuah's Sun that stood still, or Hezekiahs Sun that went backward, but Davids Sun that rejoyceth as a Giant to run his race, and turneth not again till he hath finished it. The Galatians did run well, but were interrupted; The Ephesians left their first love: The Philippians decaid in their good will to S. Paul though afterwards their care of him flourished again Phil. 4. 10. The Corinthians mingled themselves again with fornicators, after they had been washed from their filthiness. Mr. Bartlet Green Martyr, was converted by Peter Martyrs Lectures in Oxford. little a compartner of their fond follies and youthful vanities, as well in his apparel, as also in his banqueting and other superfluous excesses: which he afterwards, being again called by Gods merciful correction, did sore lament and bewail, and being sounded on a rock, as he had at first received Christ Jesus the Lord, so he walked in him, and suffered for him. Col. 2. 6.

3. Thirdly, Before you begin, sit down and cast what it will cost, to build the tower of godliness: consider what necessity there is to encounter and conquer so many corruptions, crosses and incombrances in the way to heaven. Put your selves oft to those questions of abnegation, and say, Can I deny my self in my worldly wisdom, natural wit, carnal friends, old companions, pleasures, profits, preferments, ease, excellency of learning, in mine estate, liberty, life and all? Can I take up my cross and follow Christ thorow thick and thin, thorow fire and water, thorow good report and evil report, resolving (with William Flower Martyr) That the heavens shall as soon fall, as I will forsake my profession, or budge in the least degree? And can I say as that other Martyr John Ardely did to Bonner, If every hair of my head were a man, I would suffer death in the opinion and faith that I am now in? Many will profess to do much for Christ, but nothing it is that they will suffer for him: they come forth as those souldiers with lights and torches to seek him, yea with bils and staves, as if they would fight for him. But when he saith, as to them, Here I am, Take up my cross and follow me, they stumble at the cross, and fall backwards The King of Navarre told Beza, He would launch no further into the sea, then he might be sure to return safe to the haven: Though he shewed some countenance to religion, yet he would be sure to save himself. Again, Many in their low estate could pray, profess, read, &c. who in prosperity resemble the Moon, which never suffers eclipse, but at her full, and that by earths interposition. Jonathan followed the chase, and Sampson his parents, till they met with honey. A dog follows his master, till he comes by carrion. So many a Dema, Judas, Diotrephes, follows Christ close till taken off by the world; the love whereof eats out the heart of grace, as adventitious heat consumes the natural; as Pharaohs lean kine devoured the fatter. Deny therefore all ungodliness and worldly lusts, thou that desirest to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world.

Tit. 2. 12.

4. Fourthly, Standest thou by faith? And wouldst thou stand? Be not high-minded, but fear. Pride goes before a fall, as it did in the apostate Angels, in that man of sin, and in those Illuminati, a pestilent sect in Arragon; who affecting in themselves and their followers a certain Angelical purity, fell suddenly to the very counterpoint of justifying bestiality. Apostasie takes root most an end in spiritual pride; which like a drone in the hive, or moth in fine cloth is a great waster. All graces tend to humbling, and humility is conservatrix virtutum, saith Bernard, that which keeps all the graces together: It is also both a grace, and a vessel to receive more grace, For God gives grace to the humble. Be ye therefore cloathed with humility, saith Saint Peter, 1 Pet. 5. 5. The word there used comes of a primitive that signifies a Knot, because humility ties the knot of the chain of graces, that none of them be lost; as pearls or beads are easily lost, where the bracelet is broken. Gods gifts in a proud heart (which makes men secure, uncharitable, idle) sigh under our abuse, and God hearing them groan, gives them the wings of an eagle.

5. Fifthly Propound to your selves the best paterns, and the highest pitch of perfection: not resting in any measure of grace acquired, so as to say as those in Zachary, Blessed be God, for I am rich, but advance forward toward the high price, as Paul did Phil. 3. And Nil actum credens dum quid supereſſet agendum, as Cæsar, who thought there was nothing yet done, till all was done. Beginnings are not sought for of Christians, saith S. Hierom, but ends of things: And it is a rule in the civil Law, Nothing seems to be done, if there yet remain ought to be done. For that which is but almost done, is not done at all, saith Basil. And not to go forward, is to go backward, saith Bernard. It had been good for Judas never to have been an Apostle, and for Julian never to have been a Christian, because to begin well, & not to hold on, is but to clime up higher, that he may fall the farther. Let our ladder therefore reach to heaven as Jacobs did, let our garments reach down to our feet, as Josephs did: let us offer a whole burnt-offering with the very tail also, Exod. 29. 22. Let the fire from heaven never go out upon the hearth of our hearts, as that fire of the Sanctuary, Levit. 6. 12. Let us not look back with Lots wife, wife, nor turn again when we go forward, as those living creatures did not, Ezek. 1. 12. but as the Philistims kine that drew the Ark in a new Cart (though milch kine, and had calves at home, yet) they held on their way, lowing till they came to Bethshemesh: so let us amidst so many avocations and discouragements hold on our way to heaven, going and weeping with our faces thither-ward. The dog to his vomit, and the sow to her mire, are Canonical Proverbs such as should make a Christian spew to think on them. God will spew out all that do not so, as he did the Laodiceans, who said they were rich and wanted nothing. They had false weights of their own, and therefore were grievously cheated with light gold. Whereas S. Paul, who was a fair deal better then the best of them, was still striving and straining after more, and is therefore called by St. Chrysostom, Insatiabilis Dei cultor, a greedy insatiable worshipper of God. Forgetting what is behind, saith he, and reaching forth (as runners do) unto those things that are before; I press toward the mark, I pursue or persecute it (the word signifies) with eagerness of affection: I follow it as one that will not leave, till I have that which I follow; but if I fall, I will up again and to it, and not give over: no more then when I was a persecutor I did, till I had him whom I persecuted. Thus S. Paul; and he subjoyneth, Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded. As who should say. Seem we to our selves or others never so perfect, or be we never so perfect in comparison of others, yet let us be thus minded, to strive to further perfection. And a little after, Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an example. For our conversation is in heaven, &c. Ever after he had been caught up thither, and heard things unspeakable, he became unsatisfiable, till he gat thither again. So was Moses after he had been in the Mount, and received the Law. He no sooner was come down thence, but he was at it, Exod. 33. 13. Shew me thy way that I may know thee. God grants him that request: Is he satisfied? No: he must have more yet. God must go along with the people. Well, I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken, saith God, vers. 16, 17. Is he content? No: for he said, vers. 17. I beseech thee, shew me thy glory. God shews it him: Is he well yet? No; God must pardon the sin of his people too, and take them and him for his inheritance, Chap. 34. 9. Add this fruit of his favour to the rest, and then Moses hath done, for present at least. The covetous is not so greedy of gain, as the godly of grace. He alwaies cries, Give, give, and never hath enough. If once thou saiest, It is enough, thou art undone; if thou cease to go forward, thou beginnest to go backward, &c.

DANIEL 4. 30.

The King ſpake and ſaid: Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the houſe of the Kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majeſty?

Cartw. hiſt. Chriſt.

Ic plura abſurda quàm verba. Here are not ſo many words as abſurdities, as one well obſerved of Peters ſpeech to our Saviour in the transfiguration Maſter, It is good for us to be here: Let us build, &c. Luke 9 33. So here, The King ſpake and ſaid: He for whom God had done ſo much, giving him ſo large an Empire, and adding to him the Kingdom of Ægypt, as his pay for his pains at Tyre. He, who in the year of his triumph had this viſion of his downfall, and had heard from heaven. Hew down the tree, yet leave the ſtump. He had left the poor captive Jews a ſtump, a Kingly ſeed; and hath therefore a ſtump left him, and is reſerved for a Kingly ſtate again. He that had heard, that he ſhould ſhortly be bound with a band of iron and braſs, as a mad man, and turned a grazing among beaſts for ſeven years together, till he ſhould know that the heavens do rule, and not (as the Poet hath it) Ludit in humanis divina potentia rebus. He that had ſuch ſweet and ſavoury counſel given him by Daniel, (who was a fair deal worſe troubled for him then He was for himſelf, verſ. 19.) Break off thy ſins by righteouſneſs, &c. Be as abrupt in thy repentance as thou haſt been corrupt in thy courſes; If it may a lengthening of thy tranquillity; That [If] imports not ſo much a doubt as a difficulty, in regard of the greatneſs of his ſin. Notwithſtanding which, God, of his goodneſs, gave him time to repent. Now that He (a full twelve moneth after all this) ſhould walk in his palace, and thus talk to himſelf, who can but wonder? Is not this great Babylon that I have built? A great City it was indeed, and built four ſquare (as Herodotus deſcribeth it) but Nimrod and Ninus built it: Nebuchadnezzar only enlarged it, and built the palace entirely. Yet ſuch is this mans arrogancy, he knows no other founder. Wherein he firſt robs God: for it is he that builds the houſe, and without whom they labour in vain that build it, Pſal. 127. 1. Next he wrongs his Anceſtors the firſt founders. Thirdly, he conſiders not, how he had waſted and wearied the bodies and goods of his poor Subjects: This made the people in Rekeboam's time cry to him, Alleva jugum, Alleva jugum, eaſe thou the yoke put upon us by thy father Solomon, when he built his own houſe, and the houſe of God. Fourthly, he proclaims his pride in oppoſing opposing his City to Gods city, and making it his heaven, as it were: saying in effect, What God can cast me out of it? Whereas that City was afterwards taken by Cyrus, Alexander, and others. As likewise Rome (that mystical Babylon) which since it became the nest of Antichrist, was never besieged by any, but it was surprized; yea, saith she in her heart, I sit a Queen, and shall see no sorrow, Revel. 18. 7. Lastly, As he arrogates to himself the Kingdom, till he had licked of the whip, and learned better language, vers. 37. so now, the power and the glory too, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty. God is not in all his thoughts. He sacrificeth to himself, as Sejanus did; and (Polyphemus-like) sets up himself for the sole doer. Whereas God, as he is the first authour and owner of all; so, to him, as to the utmost end of all, they ought all to return; Quasi circulo quodam confecto, and as the rivers do to the sea whence they had their beginning See Rom. 11. 36. Sith of him, and through him, and to him are all things, to him alone be glory for ever. His glory he will not give to any other, Isa. 42. 8. what ever he part with, none shall share with him in that. It is his jewel, his darling, his own eye, his wife (with reverence to his Majesty be it spoken) And as Abner might not see Davids face unless he brought him his wife Michal, so neither may any stand before God, that bereave him of his glory. He comes down from heaven (as it were) and fights hand to hand with a proud person in single combate, the whole world beholding. Surely God resisteth the proud, saith Peter. He sets himself in battle-array against them (as the original hath it) as he did against Pharaoh, Herod, and this Nebuchadnezzar; whose minde was hardened in pride (that hate of heaven, and gate to hell) as the Prophet tels his son, Dan. 5. 20. therefore, besides the brutish change of his minde, his body was much changed in feeding and living among wild beasts: It was not only a phrensie (as Ericus King of Swethland, being expeld his kingdom, for grief, fell mad: or as Bajazet taken by Tamberlane and Boniface the 8. by Charls of Burbon, bit and tare themselves for grief and vexation) but he was banished from the society of men, by the just judgement of God. And so lying in the wet and cold among beasts, his garments rotted, his hair grew hard, his nails long, &c. his mans shape remaining, his humane soul was changed to be brutish: his body also mis-shapen, and deformed, not transformed, as D. Willet hath it in his Hexapla upon Daniel, where you may read of divers like examples. Surely the Lord of hosts hath purposed it, to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honourable of the earth, Isa. 23 9. For the day of the Lord of hosts shall be on every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up, and he shall be brought low. The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. So saith Isaiah; nay, to saith Esop; who being asked, what God did in heaven? He pulleth down the proud, said he, and lifteth up the lowly; this is his work and business. He bears an aking tooth, a special spleen (as I may say so) to this sin of Arrogancy. His heart hates it, Prov. 6. 16, 17. His mouth curseth it, Psalm 119 21. and his hand plagueth it, as he did Herod among others. The people had fly-blown him with their flatteries. This swels him; and, for his pride, God turns those worms upon him to devour him: as he did the lice, upon that proud King of Spain, that set forth the invincible Armado (as they vainly called it) against England. The Spaniards are generally noted for an insolent people; and their ambition hath been to settle their Catholike Monarchy over all Christendom; but God hath hitherto crossed it, and, we trust, will do. Their language they call Romance (as if it were pure Latine) and themselves the right Hidalgoes, as if they were the only Gentlemen. So the Turks will needs be thought the only Musulmans or true believers, as Papists the only Catholikes (the Donatists affected the same title) Gnostiks the only knowing men, Anabaptists the only spiritual persons, Jesuites the only scholars, Politicians and Orators of the world. They vaunt that the Church is the soul of the world, the Clergy of the Church, and they of the Clergy; that a Jesuite cannot possibly be an heretick; but that as the devil set up Luther (that Arch-heretike) so God sent forth them to oppose him. The Chineses would perswade us, That they only see with two eyes, and all other Nations but with one. These proud Jesuites would have us believe the like of them and as it is reported of the great Chame of Tartary that he reputes himself the Monarch of the whole world, and that therefore every day, as soon as he hath dined, he causeth his trumpets to be sounded; by that sign giving leave to other Princes of

of the earth to go to dinner: So would the Iesuites be held the only Worthies, their main endeavour being to subject all to the Pope, and the Pope to themselves. Their faction (saith one) is a most agile sharp sword, whose blade is sheathed at pleasure in the bowels of every Commonwealth, but the handle reacheth to Rome and Spain. So that the very life and fortunes of all Kings and Common-wealths hang upon the horoscopes of the Jesuites pleasure. If the Iesuites be as lucky as the stars in the ascendent and culminant, they may live, continue and flourish: if malevolent, they perish, but that Deus dominabitur astris. Now may it not well be said to these croaking frogs and encroaching locusts of Rome, Ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi? They teach, That the state Ecclesiastical is so far more excellent then the civil, as the Sun then the Moon, even in temporal pomp and power: and that therefore the chief of their Clergy is as far above the mightiest Emperour, as the Sun above the Moon. And as the Sun borrows her light of the Moon, so doth the Emperour his State and power from the Pope. Is not this that Man of sin, that exalts himself above all that is called Augustus, or above all Kings and Emperours? trampling upon their necks, forcing them to hold his stirrop, to dance attendance at his gate, &c. kicking off their crowns, and crowning them again with his feet, as Pandulphus the Popes Legat did King John of England? As for King Henry the second of this land, he was forced by the Pope to kneel and pray to Beckets shrine, whom he had disgraced in his person, and having had him above his will (saith the Chronicler) whiles he lived, hath him now over his faith, being dead. Going to Canterbury to visit the sepulchre of his own Martyr, he went three miles on his bare feet, which with hard stones were forced to yield bloody tokens of his devotion on the way. And which was most shameful of all, though he protested to the very last, That he neither commanded nor willed, nor by any slight sought the death of Becket, yet by the Legat he was compelled to undergo the discipline of rods upon his bare flesh, and to receive of every Priest there present (and there were not a few) three or four lashes upon the bare; one of the Embassadours saying the while, Domine noli minari. Sir, you may spare your threats, for we fear them not; as being of such a Court, as is wont to bear rule over Kings and Emperours. In like sort the Pope, within the memory of many yet alive, lashed Henry the fourth of France (in the person of his Embassadour at Rome) after the singing of every verse of Miserere the 51. Psalm, untill the whole Psalm was sung out. Clemens the fifth would not absolve the Venetians of their Excommunication, till Francis Dandalus their Embassadour had lain like a dog at his feet under his table, with a chain of iron about his neck. Neither would Pope Martin the fourth absolve the Sicilians, till they came and prostrated themselves before him, with these words of the Letany, O lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world, Grant us thy peace. The Pope answereth, My peace I give you, my peace I leave unto you. Prodigious blasphemy! Sed exortos evangelii jubare, sagaciores (ut spero) principes ad nutum vestri Orbilii non solvent subligacula, saith a reverend Divine of our Church. They tell us, That not their Popes only but their whole Clergy is a state so distinct and absolute, as not any way subject to the temporal Magistrate, though their crimes be never so many or monstrous. These be the Locusts that have no King, Prov. 30. 27. they will have none, but that Angel of the bottomless pit, Abaddon the Pope, who stiles himself a servant of servants yet stamps on his coyn, That Nation and country that will not serve thee shall be rooted out. The Lateran Council blasphemously ascribed that to the Pope, All power is given to thee both in heaven and in earth; thou art all, and over all. And now was the Pope in the heighth of his pride, and tuft of his jollity, when suddenly (the same or the next year after) God, who resisteth the proud, raised up Luther to cut his comb, and to call him Antichrist. Ever since which, there hath been a sensible decay of the Papacy throughout the Christian world, as Bellarmine with grief acknowledgeth. It was but time God should take him down, that exalted himself not only above Angels, whom (saith John the 23. in extravag.) he hath power to excommunicate, but also above all that is called God. Our Lord God the Pope, saith one of his Parasites. Tu meritò in terris diceris esse Deus, saith another. Nicolas the first said, That he was not to be called to an account by any one, because Constantine had called the Pope by the name of God. For the which gross fiction, the very Gloss there derideth him. And who can hold laughing at that ridiculous gloss of a Popish

Theſe they look aloof on; as the proud Phariſee did on the Publican, as Caiaphas did on the Councel, Ye know nothing at all, ſaith he, Joh. 11.49. Ye are all but babies to me, &c. or as thoſe Bragadochio's in Iſaiah looked on their betters, with Stand by thy ſelf, for I am holier then thou. Odi faſtum illius Eccleſiæ, I hate the pride of that Church of Rome (ſaith Baſil) that Weſtern brow (as he was wont to call it, and) whereof he maketh great complaint to his friend Evagrius. The other four Patriarches (and with them the whole Eaſtern Church) ſeparated themſelves from the Biſhop of Rome for his intolerable inſolency; and, at their parting, uſed theſe or the like words, Thy haughtineſs we know, thy covetouſneſs we cannot ſatisfie, thy encroaching We can no longer abide, live to thy ſelf, &c. This proud Biſhop had ſtretcht himſelf beyond his line, prized himſelf above the market, ſet up his counter for a thouſand pound; affecting not a primacy only, as ſucceſſour to Peter, but a ſupremacy, as Vicar to Chriſt: indeed an Antichriſt or counter-Chriſt, pretending to be inſtead of Chriſt, but fighting againſt Chriſt, denying and oppoſing him in all his offices. Pope Leo the firſt blaſphemouſly boaſted (and Nicolas the third feared not to affirm the ſame) That Peter was taken into fellowſhip with the bleſſed Trinity, therefore Peters ſucceſſour muſt be Univerſal Biſhop. This the Patriarch of Conſtantinople ſtomacked, and could as little bear a ſuperiour as the Pope an equal; And therefore the former ſtrives to bring all the Eaſt under him, the later, Eaſt and Weſt too. His claw-back Canon ſts tell him (and he believes it) that he is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords; that the hath the power of both ſwords throughout the whole world, and rule over all reaſonable creatures; that he can do whatſoever Chriſt can do, &c. Now, as every little wind raiſeth a bubble, ſo doth the Pope value himſelf ſo much the more, as he ſees himſelf higher in the rate of others opinions. Philip the Fair (King of France) dealt plainly with him (which few others durſt do) Anno 1294. For, when Pope Boniface wrote thus to him, in an imperious manner, We would have thee to know, that thou art ſubject to us in temporals and ſpirituals, &c. He ſtoutly denied it, beginning his letter, with, Sciat tua maxima Fatuitas, Be it known to your fooliſhneſs (inſtead of Holineſs) and appealed to the See Apoſtolike, then (as he ſaid) vacant, and to the future Councel. Self-love makes men unreaſonable, and teacheth them to turn the glaſs to ſee themſelves bigger, others leſſer then they are. I am, and there is none beſides me, ſaith Nineveh. I will aſcend into heaven, and ſet my neſt above the ſtars, ſaith Babylon.

My roof receives me not, tis air I tread;
At every ſtep I feel my advanced head
Knock out a ſtar in heaven——— ſaith Sejanus.

Attila King of Huns arrogantly vaunted, That the ſtars fell before him, the earth trembled at his preſence, &c. Who hath not heard of the ſwelling titles of the great Cham, of the great Turk, of divers Roman Emperours? As Diocletian who firſt commanded divine honours to be done unto him, and held forth his feet to be kiſſed; Caligula, who by certain Engines thundered and lightned, as another Jupiter, caſting up ſtones for thunder-bolts, and repeating that hemiſtich in Homer——ἢ μὰ ἀνάξω, ἢ ἐγώ σε. Commodus would needs have the twelve moneths of the year called or counted by his twelve names or titles; Amazonius, Invictus Felix, Pius, &c. And the time of his raign to be held the golden age, and ſo ſtiled in all dates and writings. And Alphonſo the Wiſe (the fool rather) King of Spain, blaſphemouſly ſaid, That if he had been of the councel at the creation, he could have made and ordered ſome things better then they were. I will aſcend above the heighth of the clouds, and will be like the moſt high, ſaith the King of Babel, Iſa. 14. 14. It may ſeem ſtrange that ſuch proud thoughts ſhould enter into any mans heart. But by nature there's never a better of us. As in water face anſwers to face, ſo doth the heart of a man to a man. The natural heart is nothing elſe but a lump of proud fleſh. That old leven of corruption hath ſoured and ſwelled the whole lump, 1 Cor. 5. 7. The Greek word for pride ſignifies ſwelth. For pride is like a great ſwelling in the body, which unfits it for any good ſervice, and is apt to putrifie, break and run, run, with loathsome and foul matter: So doth pride disable the soul from doing duty, and at last breaks into odious words and deeds, abominable to God and men. Now if this be not thy case, bless God for his restraining and sanctifying spirit; lift up many an humble, joyful and thankful heart to him who made thee to differ. Say not as that arrogant Arminian did in answer to the Apostles question, Who made thee to differ? Ego meipsum discerno, I my self have made the difference. Or as that proud heretike said to God, Non habeo Domine quod ignoscas, I have done nothing wherefore to crave pardon. If we had no more sins to answer for, then this one of pride, we could not escape the damnation of hell. S. Paul adviseth young Students in Divinity, not to be high-minded, lest they fall into the condemnation of the devil. It was pride that turned him out of heaven. Pride (saith Hugo) was born in heaven; but forgetting by what way she fell thence, she could never finde her way thither again. Only ever since, it looks and aims at the highest. The first man would know as God; the Babel-builders would dwell as God. And as our first parents in the beginning did learn that proud lesson of the devil, Ye shall be as Gods, so we, being in their loins when they sinned, (saith a reverend Divine) and descending from them by ordinary generation, do, together with our nature, receive that corruption from them, whereby we think thus proudly of our selves, that we far excell others, and are as little gods on earth, in respect of others. Mans heart is a pallace of satanical pride. It is like unto that table of Adonibezeck, at which he sate in a chair of State, and made others, even Kings, to eat meat like dogs under his feet with their thumbs cut off. Lo such an one is every man by nature: He lifeth up himself, saying I am the man, and treadeth his brother under foot, as no body to him. The Emperour Commodus would needs be stiled ὑπερβαλών, or the Surpasser, as if there were None such. The Emperour Adrian oppressed some and slew others that excelled in any art or faculty, that he might be held the only skilful. Aristotle is said to have burnt and abolished the books of many ancient philosophers whom he excerped, that he might be the more admired. The worlds eternity, and some other Paradoxes he taught, as rather affecting singularity (saith one) then for any soundness of the matter, or strength of argument. Such an itch there is in mans corrupt nature after the applause and admiration of others. This is that Demosthenes, was a sweet hearing. Themistocles listened to nothing so willingly as to his own commendation. If others will not commend a man, he'll commend himself. Hos ego primus vidi, saith Zabarell, I was the first that found out this truth. Patres sic judicant, ego vero sic, saith another Singularitan. This is the Fathers opinion of this point, but I am of another judgement. Laurentius Valla contemned and carped at Tully, Aristotle, Virgil, and most of the best Authours except Quintilian only. And whereas he had found out some things in Logick, more then the masters of those times, he said openly, Nullam esse Logicam praeter Laurentinam, That his was the only Logick. Yea he doubted not to affirm, That he found some flaws in the fundamental points of our faith. It will easily be judged, that this man wanted neighbours. And so, before him, did those proud boasters, Palamon, who gave out, That learning was born with him, and would die with him; Epicurus, who would needs seem first to have found out the truth; whereas in many points he was more blind then a beetle; Aratus and Eudoxus the Astrologers, who boast that they had described and described the whole number of the stars; Archimedes the Mathematician, who bragged that he could number the sand in all the world, habitable and inhabitable: and that if he had but a place to stand in, off the earth, he could remove the whole body of the earth. Richardus de Sancto Victore (a Monk of Paris) preferd himself for skill in Divinity, above the Prophets and Apostles. This he had learned of his lord Lucifer, who teacheth his scholars, that which they call depths in divinity, indeed depths of Satan, whereof to be ignorant is no small commendation, Revel. 2.24. The Gnosticks, great students in these depths of the devil, counted and called themselves, The only knowing men. The Manichees besotted with an opinion of themselves, derived their name of Manna; because they held, That whatsoever they taught was to be received as food from heaven. Novatus called himself Moses, and a brother that he had, Aaron. Montanus said he was the Comforter, and his Pepuza and Tymium (two pelting Parishes in Phrygia) he called Jerusalem, as if they had been the only Churches in the world. Elymas the sorcerer had called himself Barjesus, as if he had been near of kin to Christ, Act. 12. 6. And John O-Neal, father to the Earl of Tyrone, inscribed himself in all places, I great John O-Neal, Cosin to Christ, friend to the Queen of England, and foe to all the world. But though we had known Christ after the flesh (saith Paul) yet henceforth know we him no more. Yea, though we had touched him in blood, and been flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone, yet without faith, all that were nothing. It was an honour to Mark, that he was Barnabas his sisters son: But it is a blemish to Christs brethren, that neither did they believe in him, John 7.5. Indeed how could they, when they sought their own praise only, according to that, How can ye believe in me, when ye receive honour one of another? Go up, say they to him, into Judea, that thy Disciples also may see thy works that thou doest. For there is no man, &c. John 7. 3, 4. Thus they insulted over him, or sought at least to get credit by him. But he would not gratifie them so far. For he might well have said to them, as once Eliab did ill to his brother David, I know your pride, and the naughtiness of your hearts, but it shall not be so. As for the best of his kindred, He preferred Peter, that lively spark, and James and John, those sons of thunder, before his own brother James, and before Judas, Simon, and others of them that were his near kinsmen. For who is my mother? and who are my brethren? &c. Surely, he that doth the will of God, he is my brother, and sister, and mother. Christ cals his Church his sister, his spouse, Cant. 5. 2. The neareſt affinity is Spouse, and the neareſt consanguinity, Sister. And no less good terms he gives her also after her fall, when once truly humbled; he cals her his Love, his Dove, his undefiled one, Chap. 5. 9 For to him will I speak (with special intimations of my love) even to him that is poor in spirit, and contrite in heart, and trembleth at my word, Isa. 66. 2. Though the Lord be high, yet he respecteth the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off: their breath is offensive to his sharp sent, they may not come near him. Whereupon excellently St. Austin, Videte magnum miraculum, saith he. See here a great wonder. God is on high: thou liftest up thy self, and he fleeth from thee; thou humblest thy self, and he descendeth to thee. Low things he looks close upon, that he may exalt them; proud things he knows afar off, that he may depress them. The proud Pharisee pressed as near God as he could; the poor Publican, not daring to do so, stood aloof off. Yet was God far from the Pharisee, near to the Publican. Hugo de Sancto Victore, brings in God and the devil thus debating it. Jussit Dominus funiculos afferri in partitionem, &c God commanded the lines to be brought, and division to be made. The fat and sweet of the earth he found in the low valleys, these he bade be set on the one side. The deserts and dry places he found upon steep rocks and high mountains, larger in compass, less in worth. These he made be set on the other side; and calling for the devil, bade him take his choice. The devil, who looks aloft, and cares not for low things, chose the latter, and brag'd he had got the better. But what said God? Thou art beneath, and therefore lookest only after high things; I am above, and see from thence the sweetness of low things. The violet is the lowest, but sweetest of flowers: so is humility of graces. A broken heart that lies low, and hears all that God saith, Oh it is a sacrifice that God is much delighted in! For it sends for God (as Joab did for David) to take the glory of all its atchievements. It cries out, Non nobis Domine. And, Not we, but his name, through faith in his name, hath made this man strong, &c. why look ye so earnestly upon us? It casteth down its crown at Christs feet, as the 24. Elders, Rev. 4. and sets the crown on Christs head, as Bathsheba did upon Solomons, Cant. 2. Arrogance on the other side seeks, serves, and sets up it self only; shuts out God, and is therefore worthily abhorred by him. It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt, saith proud Laban. Knowest thou not that I have power to crucifie thee, and power to loose thee? said Pilate. Cyrus caused this to be graven upon his sepulchre, I could do all things: not considering that it was God that held his right hand to subdue Nations before him, and gave him the hidden riches of secret places, Isa. 45. 1, 2, 3. Apryes King of Ægypt (the same is that Pharaoh Hophrah that Jeremy prophesied against, chap. 44.) was so puft up with pride, that he perswaded himself, and boasted, That his Kingdom was more surely settled, then that it could be taken from him by any, Whether God or man. Not long after he was taken in battle by Amasis one of his own Subjects, and hanged up. Dionysius tyrant of Sicily, thought and said, That his Kingdom was bound to him with chains of Adamant. But time soon confuted confuted him: for he was driven out, and forced to teach school at Corinth for a poor living. Xerxes (the same is thought to be that Ahasuerosh, Esth. 1.) was so lifted up, that he was angry with the mountains, winds, rivers, elements, as if they had been men under his pay: and demanded of them reverence and obedience. At Hellespont he caused to be wafted over two millions of men for the conquest of Greece: where when a sudden tempest had shrewdly battered his bridge of boats, he caused the sea to be beaten with 300 stripes, and cast a pair of fetters into it, to make it know to whom it was subject. Not long after he was forc'd to flie back in a poor fishers boat, which being over-burdened, had sunk all, had not the Persians by casting away themselves, saved the life of their King.

Heyl. Geo. 421.

And the like befell Sigismund the young King of Hungary, of whom it is storied, that beholding the greatness of his Army, in his great jollity, hearing of the coming of the Turks, he should proudly say, What need we to fear the Turks, who need not at all to fear the falling of the heavens? which if they should fall, yet were We able with our spears and halberts to hold them up for falling upon us. He, shortly after this, received a notable overthrow, many of his Army being slain, many taken, and himself had undoubtedly fallen into his enemies hands, had he not in a little boat got over Danubius. It is just with God, that proud enterprises seldom prosper: whereas those things that are fearfully and modestly undertaken commonly succeed. Ahab was lewd, but Benhadad insolent. If therefore Ahab shall be scourged with the rod of Benhadads fear, Benhadad shall be smitten with the sword of Ahabs revenge. Of all things God will not endure a presumptuous and self-confident vaunter. The stones in the wall of Ajalon shall sooner turn executioners, then an arrogant Aramite shall scape unrevenged. How much less then an Israelite? Who hath not read that proud speech of Rehoboam? My little finger shall be thicker then my fathers loins. This, how truly he spake, that one thing sufficiently sheweth, that Solomons shields of gold, were in Rehoboems daies turned to brass. Yea, it is well observed, That God dealt more severely with his servant David, for numbring the people, then for the matter of Uriah. He is more angry with a spiritual and immediate affront offered to his Majesty, in our pride and self-confidence in earthly things, then with a fleshly crime, though hainously seconded. Yea S. Austin doubts not to say, That the pride of Virginity is as hateful a sin as impurity. Every one that is proud in heart is abomination to the Lord, Prov. 16. 5. Tamberlane told the Bassa of Natolia, whom he had taken in his first encounter, That he was sent from heaven to punish his master Bajazets rashness; and to teach him, that the proud are hated of God, whose promise is to pluck down the mighty, and to raise up the lowly. And when he had taken Bajazet in battle, after he had once spoken with him, and found him to be, amidst all his misery, intolerably proud, he carried him about in an iron Cage to be seen and derided of all. And, to his further disgrace, upon festival daies used him for a foot-stool, and at other times scornfully fed him like a dog with crums fallen from his table. All which Tamberlane did, not so much for hatred to the man, as to manifest the just judgement of God against the arrogant folly of the proud. It is reported that Tamberlain being requested by one of his Noble-men (that might be bold to speak to him) to remit some part of his severity against the person of so great a Prince, answered, That he did not use that rigour against him as a King, but rather did punish him as a proud ambitious tyrant. What wouldst then have done with me, said Tamberlane to Bajazet, if it had been my fortune to have fallen into thine hands? I would, said Bajazet, have enclosed thee in a cage of iron, and so in triumph have carried thee up and down my Kingdom. Even so said Tamberlane, shalt thou be served. He further asked him, Whether ever he had given God thanks for making him so great an Emperour? who confessed ingenously, He never thought of it. To whom Tamberlane replied, That it was no wonder, so ungrateful a man should be made a spectacle of misery. For you, saith he, being blind of one eye, and I lame of a leg, was there any worth in us, Why God should set us over two great Empires of Turks and Tartars, to command many more worthy then our selves? It was therefore an excellent speech of the last French King, When I was born, there were a thousand other souls more born. What have I done to God more then they? It is his meer grace and mercy, which doth often bind me more unto his justice: For the faults of great men are never small.

while, and take some time to demur upon that piercing passage of the Apostle, Who (in Gods name) made thee to differ? or, What hast thou man, that thou hast not received? If then thou hast received it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it? If thou excell others in any gift or good part, thou must needly say of it, as once the poor Prophet did of his hatchet, Alas master, it is but borrowed. To be proud of it therefore is as great a folly, as for a vain Stage-player to be proud of his borrowed robes: or a silly groom of his Masters horse: it is as if the mud-wall should be proud of the Sun-shine. That face is hatcht with impudency, that dare arrogate any good thing to it self, that sacrificeth to his own net, that saith but in his heart, My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth. This is to pay the rent to a wrong Landlord, and so to forfeit all, as they did, Hos 2. 9. And as that proud King of Egypt did, Ezek. 29. 3, 9. Isa. 19. 5, 6. Because Pharaoh saith, The River (Nilus) is mine own, therefore saith God, I will dry up the river, and so starve Egypt.

1 Cor. 4. 7.

2 King 6. 5.

Deut. 8. 17.

Secondly, Get thine heart well seasoned with the fear of God. For the fear of the Lord is to hate evil, as pride, arrogancy, &c. Prov. 8. 13. Joseph truly feared God and therefore hated not only gross evils (as that of adultery) but close evils, as this of arrogancy. It is not in me: God shall give Pharaoh an answer, Gen. 41. 16. As he insinuates himself by this dutiful comprecation, so he extenuates his gifts, that he may give the glory to God. And he lost nothing by it. For he that said, Without me God shall answer Pharaoh, heard from Pharaoh, Without thee shall no man lift up his hand in the land of Egypt, ver. 44. So John Baptist was full of the fear of God, and thereby of humility: for these two go coupled, Prov. 22. 4. and so close, that there is no copulative in the original: thus it runs, By humility the fear of the Lord (the one is as it were predicated of the other) are riches, and honour, and life. What riches John Baptist had, I know not: but for honour, that hand of his that he thought not worthy to unloose Christs latchet of his shoe, Christ thought worthy to be laid upon his head in baptism. John modestly withstood the motion at first: he forbade him, yea he earnestly forbade him, as the Greek word signifies: for I have need, saith he, to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? But when he heard better reason, he soon submitted (an humble man will never be an heretick, never be opinionate, at least obstinate) Then he suffered him, Mat. 3. 14, 15. There are that say, That for his humility here on earth, he is dignified with that place in heaven, from which Lucifer fell. Who told them that, I know not: but this I know, that he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

Thirdly, Learn and labour to know more of God and his will, of thy self, and thy duty. The more any one seeth of God, the less he seeth by himself. As he that hath looked a while upon the body of the Sun, when he looks down again seeth nothing, but is dazelled. Abraham when he stood before God, and considered the infinite distance and disproportion, confesseth himself to be dust and ashes. Job abhorrs himself in dust and ashes, who till then thought himself some-body: Isaiah cries out, Wo is me, for I am undone, Isa. 6. 5. Yea that proud Nebuchadnezzar (when once tamed and taken down, and had seen but some small portion of Gods might and majesty) acknowledgeth, That all the inhabitants of the earth are nothing, &c. Dan. 4. 35. See thy self next, what thou art by nature, what by practise: See this in the clear crystal of Gods pure law, that perfect law of Liberty, as St. James cals it; because it freely and fully shews a man the blemishes of his soul, the errours of his life. The sight whereof (if any thing) will lay a man low in his own eyes, and make him as much abased and abashed before God, as Mephibosheth would have been before David, if he had been as fully guilty of treason, as Ziba falsly accused him. But therefore did Laodicea so admire her self, because she knew not that she was wretched and miserable &c. This if she had seen, she would soon have laid down her plumes. And so would that blind Pharisee that bragg'd as fast of his righteousness, as once Zeuxis the Painter did of Atalanta's picture; which when he had finished, he wrote under it, Sooner may Painters envy, then imitate this work: yea, he so pleased himself with the conceit of what he had done, that he died with laughing at it.

Fifthly, Look upon the beſt that ever breathed, and you ſhall find them moſt modeſtly conceited of themſelves. Jacob is leſs then the leaſt of Gods loving kindneſſes: David a worm and no man: Agur more brutiſh then any man: Great Paul the leaſt of Saints, the greateſt of ſinners; Peter, a man, a ſinner, a very mixture of dirt and ſin. Bradford in his own judgement, A very painted hypocrite. Mr. Bartlet Green Martyr, was of ſuch a modeſt nature, ſo humbly thinking of himſelf, as in few is to be found (ſaith Mr. Fox) ever dejecting himſelf under that was in him, and ever ſeeming to be leſs then he was; as well declareth not only his letter to Mr. Philpot, wherein he doth earneſtly expoſtulate with him, for ſlandering him with praiſe of his wit and learning, and other excellent vertues: but alſo by his own ſpeech and anſwers in his examination, &c. When he was beaten and ſcourged with rods by Bonner (which ſcarce any man would believe, nor I neither, ſaith the ſame Mr. Fox, but that I heard it of him) and he greatly rejoyced in the ſame yet his ſhame-fac'd modeſty was ſuch, that neither he would expreſs any mention thereof, leſt he ſhould ſeem to glory too much in himſelf, ſave that only he opened the ſame to one Mr. Cotton of the Temple, a friend of his, a little before his death. A gracious heart is not a blab of his tongue, but reſts and rejoyceth ſilently in the conſcience of a ſecret goodneſs. Chriſtian modeſty teacheth a wiſe man not to expoſe himſelf to the faireſt ſhew, and to live at the utmoſt pitch of his ſtrength. Chriſt (beſide the vail of his humanity) ſaies, See you tell no man; hid himſelf that they might not make him a King, rode upon an Aſs-colt, waſht his Diſciples feet, ſought not his own, but his Fathers glory, humbled himſelf to the death of the croſs, emptied himſelf of all his excellencies, ſuffered the contradiction of ſinners, who took him for a demoniack and a mad man: whereas in him were hid all the treaſures of wiſdom. In him they were, but hid they were: ſhall we fret when we are obſcured? is it not enough that we ſhall one day appear with him in glory? Moſes hides his glorified face, and ſaith, Who am I? when God was ſending him to Pharaoh. Many a man ſaies, Who am I not? and rather ſeems to be good, then ſeeks to be ſo. All his care is to be ſeen with Jehu, and to dazle mens eyes with admiration, not caring for unknown riches. A fool hath no delight in underſtanding, but only for this, that his heart may diſcover it ſelf, Prov. 18. 2. that he may have the name and the note of a wiſe man. But ſuch an one paſſeth commonly for a proud fool. For, When pride cometh, then cometh ſhame: but with the ſhamefac'd is wiſdom, Prov. 11. 2. The original word there ſignifies ſuch as hide themſelves through modeſty, who bluſh at mens praiſes (ſaith Aben Ezra) and are aſhamed to arrogate or own any commendation, though never ſo well deſerved. When Charls the fift was royally entertained by the French King at Paris, one of the Councellors made an elegant ſpeech to him, rehearſing all his brave acts; He briefly and modeſtly replied, That he accepted of the oration, becauſe it admoniſhed him, not ſo much what he had been, as what he ought to be. And when the Citizens of Antwerp preſented him with a rich Arras, wherein was curiouſly ſet forth his victory over the King of France, together with the names of that King, & the other Princes that were overthrown by him in the battle, he refuſed to receive it. But when they that preſented it, had taken out thoſe names, he received it, and took great content in it. The ſtars are not ſeen by day: the Sun it ſelf is not ſeen by night. As it is no ſmall art to hide art, ſo no ſmal glory to conceal glory. Not I, but the grace of God that is in me, ſaith Paul. Not I, but thy talent hath gained other talents, ſaith the good ſervant. The more direct the Sun is over us, and in us, the leſs is our ſhadow of pride and ſelf-love. Boughs, the more laden with fruit, the more lowly: but in a fan, the chaff is above the corn: not becauſe it is better, but becauſe it is lighter. Empty caſks ſound loudeſt, ſay we: Empty purſes gingle moſt, ſay the Hebrews, That which is in the midſt of fools is ſoon made known, ſaith Solomon; they are laviſh of that little wiſdom they have, and will laugh on purpoſe (with Egnatius) to ſhew their white teeth. They ſet the beſt ſide outward with Alcibiades, and have a trick, as Stephen Gardiner had, with boldneſs and ſtoutneſs to make their gifts to appear much greater; as butchers uſe to blow up their fleſh, to make it better liked of. But what ſaith our Saviour, Let your light ſhine, not your lightneſs; and let your end be that the light may be ſeen, not that your ſelves may be ſeen. The wiſe Hiſtorian obſerved, that the ſtatues of Brutus and Caſſius did therefore ſhine, becauſe they were not ſeen, and were the more glorious and illuſtrious, becauſe they were not brought forth with other images, in a ſolemn proceſſion at the funeral of Germanicus. The engine that doth all in great works, is oft inward, hidden, not taken notice of; ſo they that beſt deſerve, do leaſt deſire to be noticed or applauded. They have low conceits of themſelves, and love not the loud praiſes of others. Moſes ſhone and knew not of it. David flies from honour, and it follows him. Saul follows it, and it flies from him. Think of this, and it will prick the bladder of pride: make it fall flat, and ſhrivel to nothing. It will cure us of arrogancy, which is nothing elſe, ſaith one, but the neighing of folly.

Laſtly, Pray to God to pull down thine heart, as he did Nebuchadnezzars, but eſpecially Pauls, and to hide pride from thee. The key of mans heart he keeps under his own girdle, and orders it as his pleaſure. Ply the throne of grace therefore with unceſſant ſuites, to ſubdue thy ſtout heart, to cripple thine iron ſinews, to make and keep thee ſupple and ſoluble, tender and tractable, pliant and obedient; that ſo the Nilus of his grace may overflow the low valley of thy mind, and fill thee with all orient and fragrant flowers of knowledge and vertue. This was the courſe S. Paul took when the Devil (that King of all the children of pride, as Leviathan is called, Job 41. 34.) ſought to puff him up with the abundance of his revelations. In danger he was to have been carried higher in conceitedneſs, then he was before in his extaſie. But he complained betimes, as ſoon as ever the devil aſſaied to blow up ſuch a blab in his ſoul, he ran to God, and prayed thrice, and prevailed, that Gods grace was ſufficient for him. How eaſie is it for the beſt man to dote upon himſelf, and to be lifted up ſo high, as to loſe the ſight both of the ground whence he riſes, and of the hand that advanced him? How hard was it for Uzziah, that had invented ſtrange engines for the battering of his enemies, to find out any means to beat down his own proud thoughts! Praier would have done it. Pray therefore, and God ſhall humble thy heart, pray, I ſay, to the Lord. He hath promiſed a heart of fleſh: and to pray, is to put in ſuit the promiſes, &c.

DANIEL 1. 17.

As for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom, and Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams.

THE perfection even of humane Arts both liberal and mechanick is to be found in the Church: For, his God doth instruct him to discretion (saith the Prophet of the very plow man) and this also (that is, his skill in matters of husbandry) cometh forth from the Lord of hosts, which is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working. He it was that filled Bezaleel and Aholiab with the spirit of wisdom for the work of the Tabernacle; and that gave to the Prophet Isaiah the tongue of the learned, that he should know how to time a word to him that is weary: he wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth my ear to hear as the learned, who are ever listning after more, even to the last breath. As it is reported of David Chytraus, a Dutch Divine, that when he lay upon his death-bed, and heard some that sate by him, disputing with a low voice (lest they should disturb him) he lifted up his head as well as he could, and desired them to speak out, for he should die the more chearfully, if he died learning somewhat. Libenter omnibus omnes opes concesserim, ut mihi liceat, vi nulla interpellante, isto modo in literis vivere, saith Tully. I would give all the good in the world, that I might but sit quietly at my study, and not be called off by any other business. Some delight in horses, some in birds, others in beasts (saith Iulian the apostate) but I, from my youth up, have ever burned with the love of books. A learned and witty man he was, but learned and lewd, wittily wicked, ingeniosè nequam, as Caius Curio. He persecuted more by perswading, then enforcing men to idolatry; and prevailed more by enticements then by torments; abusing his eloquence to the dishonour of God that gave it him, and fighting against God with his own gifts, as David did against Goliah with his own sword, or as Iehu against Iehoram with his own men. He forbad all Christians the use of learned Authors: And one of his bosom-birds, Porphyry, said, It was pitty that ever so good a scholar as Paul was cast away upon our religion. S. Paul was first brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, a grave Doctor: and after that, at the University of Tarsus. That he had read Aratus, Menander, Epimenides, &c. is clear by what he cites out of them: and Scultetus gathers out of 2 Tim. 1. 6. that he was well versed in Plato's writings.

He was that wise Merchant, that besides the pearl of price, in comparison of whom he counted all but dung and dogs-meat, sought also other goodly pears, which in their proper place have their use and excellency. How bravely doth he play the Orator when he listeth, as at Athens, and before Agrippa, in setting forth his sufferings, 2 Cor. 11 23? and exhorting to unity, Ephes. 4.4. All the rowlings of Demosthenes are dull stuff to his elegancies? As oft as I hear him speak, saith Herom, me thinks I hear not words but thunder-claps. His very enemies could not but acknowledge his worth. His letters, said they, are weighty and powerful: but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible, 2 Cor. 10. 10. And why contemptible, but because he came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom (which he could have done better then the best of them) but in demonstration of the Spirit, and of Power? Humane learning (saith one) is to be used in Ecclesiastical exercises, non ut esculenta sed ut condimenta, not as meat but sauce. It were a madness, because lace sets out a garment, therefore to make a garment of lace only. Sub finem cœna dulcis est placenta. S. Austin bewailed it as a vanity of his youth, That he had framed his discourses, Ut placeret magis quam ut doceret, more to please then to profit. And when I first began to preach (saith S. Chrysostom) I was a childe, and delighted in rattles, in the applause of the people; but when I grew a man, I began to despise them. A golden-mouth'd Preacher he was (according to his name) a master of speech, as Paul was said to be, Acts 14 12. an eloquent men, and mighty in the Scriptures, as Apollos. Acts 18. 24. His eloquence (whereby he so drew men in to admiration of him, that it was grown to a common proverb, Better the Sun should not shine, then that Chrysostom should not teach) he is said to have drawn out of Aristophanes his 28. Comedies, which he laid usually under his pillow when he went to sleep. This was (as Theodoret hath it) to gather roses off the thorns, sweet honey out of bitter flowers, wholsome medicines out of venemous beasts and serpents. This was to spoil the Egyptians of the jewels they unjustly deceined from the Church, as Austin hath it. See we not, saith he, with what a deal of gold, silver, costly garments, Cyprian (that sweet Doctour and blessed Martyr) went laden out of Ægypt? With what a deal Lactantius, Victorinus, Optatus, Hilarius, besides innumerable Greek Fathers? And this was first done by that faithful servant of God Moses, of whom it is written, That he was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and so became mighty in word and deed. Now the learning of the Ægyptians (saith Pererius) was fore-told Mathematicks, Physicks, Ethicks and Divinity, a chief part whereof was Hieroglyphicks. In all these Moses was thorowly instructed, saith Philo; and in short space excelled not only all his fellows, but his teachers too. So did Daniel and his three companions, all the wise men of Babylon, whose books they read, and whose learning they looked into, which (had they held it unlawful) they would as little have medled with as with the meats that came from the Kings table, saith S. Herome; But this was (as he elsewhere hath it) to wring the sword out of Goliahs hand, and to cut off his head therewith; this was to shave the captive womans head, and pare her nails, and so to take her to wife. Humanity may be fitly used as a Handmaid to Divinity, or as Diers colour the cloth with some inferiour colour first, that they may make it a perfect purple. Wisdom sendeth forth the Arts, as her maids, to call them into the City, to help them to the better understanding of the holy Scriptures: which else, they that are unlearned and unstable, wrest unto their own destruction. Theodoret mentioneth S. Basils sharp reply to one Demosthenes, who being but an officer of the Emperours kitchin, durst encounter that Doctour of the whole world with wrested Scriptures, It belongs to thee (an unlettered person) to look to the pottage-pot. Our Saviour (I grant) chose unlearned men for his Disciples; but he made them learned before he made use of them, he gifted them before he sent them abroad. Insomuch as Acts 4.13. the Priests and Scribes (whom for their learning S. Paul called The Princes of this world, 1 Cor. 2. 8.) wondered at their boldness and abilities; as knowing that they were unlearned and ignorant men: they marvelled (as the Nazarens also did at Christ) how they came by that new learning. But besides, that it is well observed, That our Saviour excluded not from his discipline learned Nathanael & Nicodemus a master in Israel, lest if he should have called simple ones only, it might have been thought they had been deceived out of their simplicity. True it is (and pitty it is, that the greatest Clarks are not always the wisest men in the things of God; because knowledge puffeth up; as it did the Athenians, where no Church was founded, they were so self-conceited; Paul the babler was no body with them, the resurrection they derided as impossible impoſſible in nature, and took it to have been ſome ſtrange goddeſs, that Paul ſought to bring in amongſt them. So when thoſe three famous Biſhops Cranmer, Latimer and Ridley were priſoners at Oxford (where alſo they ſuffered) one of them complains, That not one ſchollar came at them, or ſhewed them any countenance. Many for the tree of knowledge, utterly loſe the tree of life, ſaith a Father. The unlearned carry away heaven, when we with all our Arts and Sciences are tumbled into hell. And ſuffer ye the wiſe of this world, ſaith another, that ſearch into natures ſecrets, and aſcend no higher, to deſcend with all their wiſdom into hell; where none are ſo filled with the wrath of God as your knowing men & Philoſophers, that detained or impriſoned the truth in unrighteouſneſs, Rom. 1.18. and were therefore delivered up to a reprobate ſenſe, or an injudicious mind, verſ. 28. ſo that they became the hereticks Patriarchs, as Tertullian ſtileth them: For it is no hard thing to ſhew, That divers ancient hereticks drew their erroneous opinions out of the writings of the Philoſophers. The Papiſts alſo tell us, That we may finde their holy water, and ſprinkling of ſepulchres in Juvenals ſixth Satyr: their lights in Sepulchres in Suetonius his Octavius; lamps lighted on Saturday in Seneca's ninety ſixth Epiſtle; diſtribution of tapers among the people, in Macrobius his Saturnals; Purgatory in Virgils Æneads. &c. Bembus the Cardinal tel us of his S. Francis, That he was reckoned by the Romiſh Church in the number of the gods. He means, he was canonized for a Saint. But the Cardinal affected to deliver himſelf in Heathen language. So did Pomponius Lætus that antiquary. His name was Petrus, but he changed it for Pomponius a Roman name; he called himſelf alſo Dictator, and worſhipped Romulus, ſaith Ludo. Vives. Such another alate was Caſtalio the Ciceronian Tranſlatour of the Bible; And before them all, Averroes the Arabian Phyſitian, who ſo madly admires his Maſter Ariſtotle, as that he doubts not to ſay, that there is no errour to be found in his works, that his learning was the chief truth, and that his underſtanding was the utmoſt bound of humane underſtanding; that he was the rule and pattern that nature invented, wherein to ſet forth the utmoſt perfection of a man, &c. And when he died, cried out, Sit anima mea cum Philoſophis. Let my ſoul be where the Philoſophers ſouls are. The Colonienſes indeed ſet forth a book De ſalute Ariſtotelis, of the ſalvation of Ariſtotle, and affirm, That he was Chriſts fore-runner in naturals, as John Baptiſt was in ſupernaturals. And whether Eraſmus was in earneſt or in jeſt, I know not; but in his Preface to Tullies Tuſculan Queſtions, he hath this piece of Letany, I can hardly forbear ſaying, Saint Socrates pray for us. When he was ready to die, he often repeated this ſpeech, Domine, fac finem, fac finem. Make an end, Lord, make an end; but what he meant by thoſe words, I wot not, ſaith Melanchthon. Sure it is, his Saint Socrates could then do him no good. Juſtin Martyr tels us, That he left his Gentiliſm upon reading a piece of Plato; and holds (but groundleſly) that thoſe that lived κατὰ λόγον (that is, according to the rule of reaſon) before Chriſt came in the fleſh, were to be counted good Chriſtians, although they had no hope, underſtanding, nor taſte of the future reſtauration by Chriſt. This Paradox was ſtifly defended in the Councel of Trent by Androdius, Soto, Vega and Victoria. Venator alſo the Arminian rageth and ſaith, I deny this propoſition, No man can be ſaved that is not knit to Chriſt by a true faith. But the Scripture affirmeth, That there is no other name under heaven whereby to be ſaved, but only by the name of Jeſus. And S. Auſtin (though he yielded that by the reading of Cicero's Hortenſius, he was taken off from the hope of vain things, and the deſire of earthly cares, and perſwaded to the love of wiſdom, and contemplation of the things above) yet he cannot but ſay, that nothing more cooled his affection toward that book then this, that he found not in it the name of Jeſus. This to a true Chriſtian is mel in ore, melos in aure, jubilum in corde; honey in his mouth, muſick in his ear, jubilee in his heart. S. Paul cannot come off it, but names it nine ſeveral times in ten verſes. All the learning that he cared for was to know Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified. To know him, I ſay, not notionally only, and out of the book (for ſo every Catechiſm teacheth him) but experimentally; to know the power of his death, and the vertue of his reſurrection; to have a Bible ſtampt in his head, and the counterpane of the Covenant graven in his heart. This, this is the only learning, without the which all other learning doth but light men into utter darkneſs. Of Menius a certain Poet it is recorded, that he was for learning every way ſo abſolute and accompliſhed, that he gave place to no man then alive. Eratoſthenes was ſir-named πένταθλος, becauſe he could diſpute excellently in any art whatſoever.

soever. Democritus was skilfull in all sciences, saith Suidas; there was nothing wherein he could not publickly profess, saith Cicero. Hippias Eleus was wont to boast, That there was nothing in any Art which he knew not of, whether liberal or illiberal: for with his own hands he made the ring he wore upon his finger, the coat upon his back, the shoes upon his feet, &c. as Tully tells us. Aristotle was a Magazine of Learning, and is therefore (as aforesaid) over-admired by Averroes, and was abundantly rewarded by Alexander the Great, who gave him for his book De natura Animalium, eight hundred Talents. Gaza who translated that Work of Aristotle into Latine, and dedicated it to Pope Sixtus, met not with so good a match. For when he had brought and presented the book very richly bound up in velvet, and bossed with gold, the Pope (that Ass) asked him what the outside stood him in: Gaza made Answer, Forty crowns. The Pope allowed him so much mony, and so dismissed that learned man without any further reward, who deserved a great Honorary for so profitable a piece of work. But to return to his Author Aristotle, whom all worthily extoll for his Learning, not so for his Honesty: In the Town of Stuckard in Germany, a certain Doctor of Divinity preached, That the Church might be ruled and taught concerning God and the things of God, out of Aristotles Philosophy (his Ethicks especially) though the Bible were lost out of the world; whereas he himself confesseth the disability of Moral knowledg to rectifie the intemperance of nature; and made it good in his practice; for he used a common strumpet to satisfie his lust. He was also accused at Athens, and banished into Chalcis, because he had evil opinions of the Deity, say divers Authors. As for his Divinity, which he calls his Metaphysicks, whereof he writes fourteen books; It is saith Ramus, the most foolish and impious piece of sophistry that ever was written. Tully was a great Scholar, no doubt, and he knew it. Two things (saith he) I have to glory in; My knowledg of good Arts, and my waging of great acts: the first whereof shall never be taken from me while alive, the second no not when I am dead. There was one that wrote an Apology for Tully (saith Melanchon) and commended him for a holy man and a good Christian, because he saith somewhere, Reprehendo peccata mea, &c. I condemn mine own errors, for that I trusted to Pompey, and took his part. And Lotanus Lovaniensis writes, That there was no other faith found in Abraham then what was found in Cicero; whereas Abraham saw my day, saith Christ, and rejoyced; he walked with God and was upright; not so Cicero. His tongue we all admire, saith Augustine, not so his practice: And how little his Learning could doe for him (for lack of Faith) when he came to dye, that speech of his sufficiently witnesseth, I know not how, but so it is, the medicine is weaker then the disease. It is nothing but true faith that can fortify the heart against the fear of death. Seneca and such like have set forth what a mercy mortality is, what a happiness that we can lose our lives when we list, how contented a man should be with life, how couragious in death, &c. A great Philosopher he was, and a close Student, as himself testifieth. A mighty man he was surely, saith Lipsius, and a mighty spirit works in them that read him. But yet (by your leave) he that shall read Dio Cassius his testimony of him, will scarce take him for an honest man. He salutes his friend Lucilius thus, Si philosopharis, bene est, ego quidem philosophor. But his practice was most unphilosophical. He enveighed against Court-parasites, yet was ever himself at Court: He detested Flatterers, when none flattered more then he: he taught Chastity, but was too inward with Agrippina the mother of Nero, and taught him by his practice that abhorred trade of unnatural filthiness. He reproved rich men, but got a vast estate; and condemned luxury, when himself had five hundred stools of Cedar, with feet of Ivory, and every thing else answerable. Thus Abana and Pharphar may serve to scour and rinse, but Jordan only can cure the Leper. Learning and Philosophy may barb and curb corruption; but it is the Scripture only that giveth more grace, as S. James hath it, and doth a perfect cure upon the Conscience. And that is only too when it is seconded and set on by the Spirit, who moves upon the face of these waters, stirs them, and makes them medicinable, wholsome words, such as have a healing property in them, as the word signifies. For else the word profiteth not, unless it be mixt with faith; yea the bare letter killeth (I say not, Learning killeth, as that Ignoramus once mistook the matter) but the Spirit giveth life. Erasmus was as well seen in the Text as another, and did a great deal of good by his Latine translation, gave much light to it by his Annotations and Paraphrases. Besides his other worthy works, he took infinite pains in furbishing the Fathers. This one thing (saith he) I dare boldly affirm, That S. Hieroms books never cost him so much pains in making them, as they have cost me in restoring them. And yet for all this we cannot tell what to make of him, for matter of religion. Erasmus in religione fuit ἀπρόσωπος, saith Buckolcerus He was as soon with Protestants, and as soon with Papists, and so was well thought of on neither side, lost his good esteem with all. Beza thinks he was not sound in the doctrine of the Trinity. And it was a witty truth put upon him by one of his friends (as he himself relates it) concerning his Enchiridion of a Christian souldier, That there was more holiness to be found in his book, then in the Authour of his book. Raram fecit virtus cum scientia mixturam, saith one. Learning and grace meet not but in a few. Galen the chief Physitian derided the Bible. Paracelsus was an Atheist, and (if Erastus belie him not) a Magician. Ulpian the chief Lawyer was a bloody persecutour. Baldus an Arch-patron of the Popes supremacy; and yet they were wont to say of him, That he knew all that was knowable. Tostatus (otherwise called Abulensis) was omnium scientiarum, doctrinarumq; arca & emporium, A magazine or mart of all sciences; so skilful in each, that one would have thought he had studied nothing else but that, all his life long. Besides, if he had had all his works, he is thought to have written as many sheets, as he lived daies: and yet carried down the stream of the times with the errour of the wicked, as S. Peter hath it, 2 Pet. 3. 17. And as Calderinus his contemporary was wont to say, when he went to Mass, Eamus ad communem errorem, he stickled stifly for Antichrist. Laudo acumen viri si in meliora incidisset tempora longè maximi, saith Causabon, It was his unhappiness that he fell upon such bad times, else he might, likely, have been better. I was an obstinate Papist (saith Latimer of himself) as any was in England; Insomuch that when I should be made Bachelour in Divinity, my whole argument went against Philip Melanchon and his opinions. Bilney heard me at that time, and perceived that I was zealous without knowledge, and came to me afterwards in my study, and desired me, for Gods sake to hear his confession. I did so; and, to say the truth, by his confession I learned more then afore in many years. So from that forward I began to smell the Word of God, and forsake the school-Doctours, and such like fooleries. Horrible barbarism had overspread the eye of whole Christendom. To be a Grecian was grown suspicious, but to be an Hebrician, little less then heretical. Rodulphus Agricola, and Joannes Capnio lived together at Heydelberg. Rodulphus interpreted Greek Authours to the yovng students; Capnio read them an Hebrew lecture; but privately, and to a few only, for fear of the Monks, who were mad at that general resurrection of all good learning and language, a little before the receiving of the Gospel. For as in the first plantation thereof in Europe, God shipped the arts before into Greece, that they might be as harbingers unto it, as Tertullian speaketh: So in these later ages, the Lord intending a reformation of religion, set up the Turk to over-run Greece, and by that means sent over into these Western parts divers learned exiles, as Chrysoloras, Trapezuntius, Gaza (who translated Tully de senectute into Greek) Argyrophylus, Chalcondylas, Cydonius (who translated likewise Thomas Aquinas his works) Marcus Musurus (with whom Erasmus lived familiarly) Hermotimus Spartiata, whom Capnio heard in France, as he had done Argyrophylus in Italy. These were Gods first instruments to restore humane learning, that was almost lost out of the world. At which time also he vouchsafed to mankinde the knowledge of the Art of Printing, which is said to have been first invented at Strasborough in Germany, by John Guttenberg, a Monk, where likewise John Mentelius printed the first book, and that was Tullies Offices; the copy whereof is kept in the publike Library at Frankford to this day for a Monument. After this, the Press was translated first to Mentz, and then to Rome by Joannes Gallinacensis; and shortly after, there were printed at Paris, Antwerp, Venice and divers other places, the Works of sundry learned men, stirred up by God to fetch the Arts back out of banishment. Such as were in Italy, Bembus, Sadoletus, Victorius; in Germany, Erasmus, Melanchon, Camerarius, Sturmius; in France, Budaus, Silvius, Turnebus, Lambinus: here in England, Ludovicus Vives, S. Thomas Moor. Lilly, Linaker (my near kinsman by the mothers side) and many others. Buchanan indeed the Scot complains, that he was born, nec cœlo, nec solo, nec sæculo erudito, in neither a learned air, soil, nor age; But as the Historian saith of D. Cox, and M. John Cheek Tutours Tutours to K Edward 6.) that though they were men of mean birth, yet were they so well esteemed for vertue and learning, that they might well be said to be born of themselves. So may it be said of that prince of poets Buchanan. He was an honour to his country, better known by him, perhaps abroad, then he by it, as Hippo was by great Austin.

But to proceed; After that humane learning began thus to reflourish and lift up the head, Divinity also, that had been shamefully obscured and slurried with needless and endless doubts and disputes, was vindicated and illustrated by the knowledge of Latine, Greek and Hebrew (the dignity and study whereof the holy Ghost seems to intimate that he would have ever kept afoot in the Church by the inscripton of our Saviours title on the cross in those three tongues) and all frivolous and fruitless school-quirks taken out of the way, young students were put upon the reading of the Scriptures, instead whereof, till then, little was heard in the Church, but the dotages of Monks and legendary fables. Then grew up that felix proventus, that golden age of glorious Divines, famous and matchless for depth of learning and height of holiness. I speak not here of Jesuites, who brag that the Empire of learning is within their dominion, and that we have not a scholar on our side. The Cardinal (such is his candour) in his book of Ecclesiastical writers, doth not vouchsafe to name any one of ours; under whose table (nevertheless) it is evident that he scraped together most of the crums, that he maketh use of. Great scholars, we grant, they are many of them. And yet we doubt not to say of them, as the Chronicler doth of D. Shaw and Friar Pinket (that were Richard the 3. factours to obtrude bastardy on K. Edw. 4. and so to disable his children for succession) That they were of greater learning then honesty, and yet of more repute then learning; being such, that more regarded by the ignorant to be accounted learned, then by the learned to be judged ignorant. Inter indoctos etiam Corydus sonat. To learned men those seem fools, that to fools seem learned, saith Quintilian. Attorneys (saith another) among swains are taken for lawyers, among lawyers they hardly have the esteem of swains. Jesuites have a notable faculty of setting the best side outward (as is noted before of Stephen Gardner) and of boasting themselves for some great thing, as Simon Magus. The Iebusites boasted and insulted over David, that he should not enter their tower of Sion, though there were but some few blinde and lame to defend it. The Iesuites crack as fast of their power and prowess, could they but get us out of our paper-castle of Scripture-testimonies, into the open field of Fathers and Councels (as Brisow phraseth it) what they would do to us, what babies they would make of us. But how well they have done it, let all the world see in their concertations and controversies with our Whitakers and Rainolds (to go no further) many of whose works remain yet unanswered, indeed, because they are unanswerable. For D. Whitakers, one that knew him well, and knew as well what he said of him, gives him this testimony, That never man saw him without reverence, nor heard him without wonder. And for D. Rainolds, He was (saith the same Authour) a well furnished library, full of all faculties, of all studies, of all learning; whose reading, whose memory was near to a miracle. He was (saith another forraign writer,) a living library, a third University. Gentilis (who yet loved him not) could not but confess, That he knew the civil law as well as himself, who yet was the Kings professour for the laws in the University of Oxford. These came not to the Divinity schools ἡμίβαπτοι, half-dipped, as Lucian phraseth it, but thorowly died, and well provided of humane learning. Spensippus was wont to say to such, as came to his philosophy-school without musick and Geometry, Get you hence; for you want the handles and handmaids to Philosophy. Plato in his Commonwealth, calleth those bastard Philosophers, who think they can attain to others arts without the help of Logick. Unskilful Logicians, saith he, tear truths in pieces, as curs do clouts. Our Lord Christ (the Arch-prophet and great Doctour of his Church) though he be not tied to schools or means, but can make an Ass confute his master, and doth oft chuse the simple to confound the learned (when it was scornfully demanded, Is Saul also among the Prophets? one of the same place answered, But who is their Father? As who should say, Prophecy comes not so much by mans teaching as Gods; therefore wonder not that Saul professies, though not bred a scholar) yet himself honoured schools, when he sate among the Doctours, both hearing them (for learnings sake) and asking them questions; when he pitcht upon Paul scholar to Gamaliel, for an elect vessel, to bear his name to the Gentiles, and to be able at Athens to dispute philosophically with those Philosophers; when he commanded Timothy to give attendance to reading; when he gave Solomon wisdom to set in order so many Proverbs, to discourse of so many particulars from the Cedar to the shrub: when he gave his people a Kiriath-sepher, a City of letters or books, (such as our Universities are) to be unto them, as the library of Alexandria is said to be, physick for the soul. Divers of the Patriarchs are held to have been skilful in physick, and therefore so welcome to Kings, as Abraham and Isaac to Pharoah and Abimelech. From the mouth of Adam, saith one, as from a fountain issued all the profitable doctrine, discipline, wisdom, and knowledge that is in the world. The longevity of the Fathers before the flood was a work of Gods providence, for the perfecting of the sciences, saith another. Japhet dispersed abroad his Europe the doctrine of the promised seed, saith a third, which was afterward collected and conserved by the Sybyls, when it began to be forgotten. Hence the ancient Sages fetcht whatsoever sound thing they held concerning God, the immortality of the soul, the duration of Empires, &c. Abrahams philosophy, is thus described by Philo the Iew, who might have it by tradition. He reduced all the effects of the second causes to the first cause immediate. He did not attribute to the Sun the light of the day, nor to the clouds rain, nor to the eyes sight, nor to the ears hearing, nor to the other next instruments of sense the cause of their faculty, but referred all to the Soveraign head, the Creator of substances, the giver of forms, the cause of causes, &c. Iosephus and Eusebius tell us, That Abraham taught the Mathematiks in Egypt. Neither want there those that shew a book that was made, as they say, by Moses and his sister Miriam concerning Alchimy; which is an Art without art, saith one; A multiplying of something by nothing, saith Another. An omne, aliquid, nihil, that that Moses, I believe, never dreamt of: nor was it any part of the wisdom of Egypt, wherein he was instructed and excelled, Acts 7.22. And although he were mighty in word and deed, yet he hath left us nothing in writing of his Egyptian learning, nothing of the true rational philosophy which he both learnd & taught long before Mercurius Trismegistus was born (whom yet Iamblicus makes the first author of Egyptian Arts) S. Ambrose gives the reason: because he received Gods Spirit, as the servant of God, faithful in all his house, he prefer'd the heavenly truth before that vain earthly philosophy, & set down such things only as he judged fit for the furtherance of our faith. Arts are a rich blessing of the Lord, and it was then, and is ever to be wished, that all Gods faithful messengers were endued with such excellent parts of humane learning as Moses was; But, What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord to those that preached mens devices, and sought out vain things in stead of Gods word, *Ier.*23.28. striving to please the people, and to set up themselves, by ostentation of their own gifts and learning. The 32. Psalme is entituled Davids learning; and was penned to teach the unlearned how to get true happiness. And Solomon calleth this knowledge Wisdoms or Knowledges. And Isay calleth that a learned tongue, that studieth out cases of conscience, and speaketh a word in due season; Iob cals him an Interpreter, one of a thousand, that declareth unto man his righteousness, &c. How vain then are those that count nothing worthy to be known but these earthly learnings, and spend all their time and studies in them, as the Heathen did, till they become almost as heathenish? Their spare-hours indeed, and as it were for recreation sake, many of the ancient Fathers spent, and not unprofitably, in Heathen Authours; partly for the bettering of their stile, as Chrysostom: and partly for confutation of heathenish opinions and superstitions, as Clemens Alexandrinus, &c. which made Iulian the apostate cry out, Proprijs pennis configimur, we are beaten with our own weapons. Thus S Paul beat the Athenians, thus Arnobius in a lofty and lively stile beats the Gentiles, after that himself had written some things against the Christians before he was converted from Gentilism. He for his stile was called the Christian Cæsar, as Lactantius (his scholar) was called the Christian Cicero. S. Hierom passeth this censure upon his writings; Lactantius was as it were a certain flood of Tullian eloquence; I would he had been as happy at confirming of our religion, as he was at the confuting of the contrary superstition. Sed non omnia possumus omnes. Tully wished, Would he could as easily find out the true God, as descry the false. And had he consulted the Iews, whom for their calamities he so much sleighted, he might haply have heard of him. Something he had read of him, and thereby groped after him in the dark, Acts 17.27. in Plato, who speaketh thus, and is translated word for word by Tully; To finde out the Maker and Father of all, is a hard task: to tell what he is, when thou haſt found him out, is impoſſible. Hence the Athenians had their Altar dedicated to the unknown god, that is to the true and only God: Of whom they had learned (out of the antient Philoſophers and Sybilles oracles) that he was but one inviſible, ineffable eſſence, whoſe name cannot be uttered, as the Jews held, from whom the beſt of the Philoſophers drew their beſt Divinity. Hence Lucan a Heathen Poet, calleth the Jews God, an uncertain God. Juvenal jeareth, That they worſhip nothing but the clouds, and an unknown God within them. And Ariſtophanes brings in Socrates worſhipping the clouds, becauſe he worſhipped not the ſame Gods, as the vulgar did, but ſought to bring in new ones, as Laertius relates it. For which cauſe alſo, he was condemned to death in the ſame court of Areopagus, whether S. Paul was hurried, but by a ſpecial providence of God eſcaped: not being ſo much as called to his anſwer, which would have been to the hazard of his life. Athens is called by Euripides, the Greece of Greece: by Demoſthenes, the eye, ſoul and Sun of Greece; by Thucydides, the common ſchool of mankinde. There were the fineſt and moſt Mercurial wits of the world; and they had the braveſt preacher in the world, who took his text off one of their altars, and expounded it out of their own Authors. But with what ſucceſs? Some doubted, ſome derided, a very few only were converted and no Church planted. For the natural man (though never ſo learned) perceiveth not the things of God, as little as Nicodemus (though a Doctor) did the doctrine of regeneration.

What then? ſhall learning be the leſs valued, becauſe by ſome abuſed, perverted, and made a hinderance from heaven? The Anabaptiſts indeed condemned the arts, and other ornaments of grace and nature, for the unworthineſs of the perſons or ſubjects wherein they were found. Luther retorted upon them, Then, belike, matrimony, authority, liberty, &c. are to be deſpiſed and avoided. Are not the works of God good, becauſe the men who uſe them are ſome of them wicked? The Romans, I know not upon what diſlike, baniſhed one time, all Philoſophers out of their City; but that was not the wiſeſt act that ever they did. Licinius the Emperour was ſuch an enemy to learning, that he called it the plague and poiſon of the Common-wealth. But that was the braying of an aſs, rather then the ſpeech of a man. Pope Paul the ſecond pronounced all Schollars hereticks, and ſeriouſly exhorted the Romans not to breed up their children at ſchool: it was enough if they could write and read. It is cautionated by the Duke of Ruſſia, That there be no ſchools, leſt there ſhould be any ſchollars but himſelf. The people ſay in a difficult queſtion, God and our great Duke know all this. The Turks Jamizaries upbraided their Emperour with his learning. For when Bajazet the ſecond had caſt Achmetes Baſſa into priſon, thoſe Martial men, amongſt many other opprobrious words wherewith they ſhamefully loaded him, as drunkard, beaſt, raſcal, &c. they called him oftentimes by the name of Bengi, Bengi, that is, Scholler, Scholler, which amongſt them is accounted in a Prince to be no ſmall diſgrace. But what ſaid a far wiſer man? Happy is that Common-wealth where either Philoſophers bear rule, or the Rulers ſtudy Philoſophy. The Doctors and Judges amongſt us (to intimate ſome ſuch thing ſurely) have one and the ſame habit (ſquare caps and ſcarlet gowns) preſcribed them. Nebuchadnezzar ſeems to have been a Schollar, Dan. 1. 19. for he was able to poſe the young ſtudents, and to pronounce after he had communed with them, which were the beſt learned. Yea, it is ſaid, v. 20. That in all matters of wiſdom and underſtanding, that the King enquired of Daniel and his fellows, he found them ten times better then all the Magicians (ſo they called their Philoſophers and interpreters of divine and humane laws) and wiſe men (the learned of all Nations were called ſo, Mat. 23. 34. till Pythagoras firſt in modeſty named himſelf Philoſopher, or a wel-willer to wiſdom) that were in all his realm. Aſhaſhuerosh alſo, when he could not ſleep, called for a book; ſo did Tamberlane the night before the mortal battle between him and Bajazet, he called for a book (care would not ſuffer him to ſleep) wherein was contained the lives of his Fathers and Anceſtors, and other valiant worthies; the which he uſed ordinarily to read, as he then did, not as therewith vainly to deceive the time, but to make uſe thereof by the imitation of that which was by them worthily done, and declining of ſuch dangers, as they by their raſhneſs or over-ſight fell into. Alphonſus King of Sicily called his Books his beſt Councellors; for they would tell him truth, when none elſe durſt. Julius Cæſar wrote his own acts, and modeſtly called them, not Hiſtories, but Commentaries. He would be carved ſtanding upon a globe of the world, and having in his left hand a book, in his right hand a ſword, translated Boetius his books De Consolatione, handsomely into the English tongue; that she took very ill that Anagram, Veritas armata, according to the Queen of Scots name Maria Stuarta: that being perplexed whether or no to put the Queen of Scots to death, she sate many times melancholy, and often sighing muttered to herself, Aut fer aut feri, and Ne feriare feri, &c. She answered several Embassadors in their several languages; being herein like Cleopatra, who gave answers by herself to the Ethiopians, Arabians, Hebrews, Syrians, Medes and Parthians, and could tune her tongue like an instrument of many strings (saith Plutarch) to whatsoever diasect she listed. But besides the vulgar tongues (wherein she was ready) Queen Elizabeth understood the learned tongues; as did also, not long before her, the Lady Jane Grey, and that famous Olympia Fulva Morata, of Ferrara in Italy; who publikely and with great commendation professed the Greek and Latine tongue at Heidelberg, Anno Dom. 1554.

τὴν γλῶτταν ὥσπερ ὄργανον πολύχορδον ἐυπετῶς τείνασα καὶ θιγγάνουσα διὰ λέκτου. Plutarch.

I conclude with K. James, whose golden pen (saith a reverend Divine, in whose words I relate it) hath given such a blow to that beast of Rome, that he will never be able to stand upon his four leges again. He hath shot out of his royal bow such keen arrows taken out of the quiver of Gods Book, which will hang in the sides of that scarlet whore, and make her lame as long as she lives, &c. This learned King after he had moderated as Doctor of the Chair at Oxford in all faculties, when, in the publike library there, he beheld the little chains wherewith the several books are fastned to their places, I could wish, said he (if ever it be my lot to be carried captive) to be shut up in this prison, to be bound with these chains, and to spend my life with the fellow-captives that stand here chained. Few Princes have the happiness that Trajan had, who though he were no Schollar, yet he truly understood, and accordingly did those things that pertain to a scholler. But he highly esteemed learning in Pliny, and others whom he prized and preferred, no less then did Antonius the Philosopher; who was not ashamed after that he was Emperor, to resort daily to his Doctor. And after he came to Athens and was admitted to be of that University, he granted them large privileges, did them great honours, and founded many Lectures with a liberal allowance of maintenance. Æneas Sylvius (afterwards Pope) was wont to say of learning, That popular men should esteem it as silver, Noble-men as gold, Princes as pearls. His successor Nicolas the fifth, when it was told him, That there were such and such in Rome that made good verses; Nay not good verses, said he; for if they can do so, why come they not, and make themselves known to me, Qui Poetis etiam malis pateo, who am a favourer and rewarder of any Poets be they never so bad? Divers learned men flourished in the times of our Henry 1. (sirnamed Beauclark) because he had in his youth some taste of learning, which put many of his Subjects into the fashion of the book: like as all the Court of Sicily was set upon the study of Philosophy, when Dionysius looked that way, and had got the company of Aristippus and Plato; the former of whom, said he, is ever craving money of me, the latter desires nothing but Books. And indeed how much Plato preferred books before money, well appeared, when he gave (as he is reported to do) for three books thirty thousand florens. As of Reuchlin it is storied, that he gave the Jew a crown an hour that read Hebrew to him at Rome. Of S. Hierom, That he went by night and by stealth to the Jew that taught him Hebrew: for if it had been known, the Jews would have been the death of them both. This he did, when he was now an old man: as Cato, though old, set himself to learn Greek, and Sigismund the Emperor Latine. The Emperor much bewailed the matter at the Councel of Constance, That neither he, nor any of his great Courtiers and Councellors were able to answer a forraign Embassador in the Latine tongue. He began therefore to learn, though it were late first. And when some of his Nobles that had no learning, and therefore hated it, took it in great disdain and dudgin, that he preferred before them some that were of mean degree, meerly for their learning, he answered, That he had good reason to honour schollars above all, as those that were singularly graced and gifted by God. Knights and Lords, said he, I can make in a day as many as I list; but schollars God only can make, from whom comes every good gift and perfect giving: which in the original Greek is an Hexameter verse, as that of S. Peter is an Iambick, Et poeticum quid spirat, The sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire, &c.

ATHEISM,

ATHEISM.

Psal. 14. 1.

The fool hath ſaid in his heart, There is no God.

He fool hath ſaid it: and ſurely none but a fool would ſay it. One in whom common reaſon is faded and dried up, as the ſap is in a leaf in Autumn, ſo the word ſignifies. The Philoſopher goes further, and ſaith, He that denieth the one God, and his providence in all things, is not only void of reaſon, but of ſenſe. And yet this witleſs, ſapleſs, ſenſleſs creature, this wild aſſe-colt, is every mothers child of us by nature: witneſs S. Paul Rom. 3. where going about to prove all natural men to be ſinners, he fetcheth proof out of this Pſalme, and the tenth, where the ſame thing is avowed. It is (I confeſs) an inviolable principle, and indelebly ſtampt upon mans nature, That there is a God. The barbarous people of Braſil, that are ſaid to be, Sine Fide, ſine Rege, ſine Lege, that have neither Religion, Rule nor Raiment, yet they have ſome knowledge of God, ſome ſpice of religion, ſuch as it is; Rather then want a god, they worſhip the very devil; not inwardly only (for ſo the moſt among us do, being acted and agitated by the devil, who is therefore called the God of this world; by whom he is as readily obeyed, as God was in the Creation, when he ſaid, Let there be Light, &c.) but alſo with an outward worſhip. The Devil himſelf, though he be no Atheiſt, nor can be (for he feels the wrath of God, and ſo believes and trembles) yet he doth all he can to make men Atheiſts; becauſe when there is no fear of God before their eyes, they will ſin all manner of ſins the Devil would have them ſin, Pſal. 14. 1, 2, 3. And Rom. 3. 18. After a bedrole of ſundry other ſins, this is ſubjoyned, as the root of all the reſt, There is no fear of God before their eyes; That is, they are flat Atheiſts, if not in opinion, yet in practice.

Epheſ. 2, 3.

Atheiſts in opinion are, 1. Such as conclude there is no God. 2. Such as ſuſpect as much. Of the former ſort was Pharaoh, who knew no other God but himſelf, and therefore asked, Who is the Lord? He ſhould rather have asked, Who is Pharaoh? a miſerable mortal creature, a worm and no man, a mixture and compound of dirt and ſin. Gods attributes ſhew both what he is, and who he is. To the Queſtion of Moſes what he is? God gave a ſhort anſwer. I am. To the ſecond by Pharaoh, who he is; he made a large reply, till Pharaoh was forced to anſwer him, The Lord is righteous. Eliphaz alſo accuſeth Job, that he ſhould ſay, How doth God know? Can he judge through the thick cloud? Dark clouds are a covering to him, that he ſeeth not, and he walketh in the circuit of heaven, Job 22. 13, 14 As if he had had nothing to do, or took no care at leaſt of his earthly kingdom. And doth not Job himſelf, when once wet to the skin with the tempeſt of Gods wrath ſoaking into his ſoul, ſeem to ſay ſo much? Job 37. 23, 24.

Dicæarchus & Protagoras de Deo an sit nec ne, modò serveat ella, inquirendum non putant. Cic.

But God steps forth (as it were from behinde the hangings) over-bearing and controuling him out of the whirlwinde, Chap. 38. 2. Who is this, saith he, that talks thus? How now? Peace, and be still. Histories tell us of some profest Atheists that utterly denyed a Deity, and that either out of sensuality, as Epicurus and Lucretius: or out of stomack, as Diagoras, who having written a book of verses, and made it ready to be set forth, was by stealth deprived of it. And when he had called him that had stolen it before the Senate of Athens, he sware that he did it not, and so was quit, and afterwards set out the book in his own name. Which when Diagoras saw, and that he was not presently strucken with a thunderbolt, he became an Atheist. So did Porphyry and Lucian, who were Christians at first, but receiving injury by the Church, the one by words, the other by blows, in spite became Atheists. Porphyry wrote against the Bible, and sought to disprove it. So did Galen the great Physician. He jears at Moses for saying, That God made all things of nothing. Egregiè dicis, Domine Moses, sed quomodo probas? is said to have been the speech of Aristotle, when he read Genesis. For, ex nihilo nihil fit, saith Philosophy. And Plato never cals God Ποιητὴν or Κτίστην, a Creatour, but Δημιουργὸν, as if he had made the world of a præexisting matter, coæternal with God himself. But what saith the Apostle? Credo, non probo. Thorow faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the bare word of God, Heb. 11. 3. And by the same mighty word are upheld, Heb. 1. 3. which else would soon shatter and fall asunder, but that he hoops them, as it were, and holds them together. This the Athenians knew not, as S. Paul boldly tels them, Acts 17. 23, 24. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you: God that made the world, and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands. Thus saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool; where is the house that ye build unto me? Isa. 66. 1. The Turks build their Moschies or Churches without any roof,

Turk. hist. 342. because they hold even as we do, That God is incomprehensible, a circle, whose center is every where, whose circumference is nowhere, as Empedocles described him. Aristotle would confine him to heaven, as if his presence and providence extended not to things done on the earth. Lucian also, that Atheist, tels us of certain crannies and chinks in heaven, through the which Jupiter, at some set times, looks down upon men. And if then they be praying, they may be heard, otherwise not. With the same impudency also doth he deride all other his Heathenish gods; and yet with the same blasphemous mouth raileth upon Christ as a crucified Cosener (I abhor to relate it) and upon Christians as mad men, because so forward to suffer Martyrdom. Thus he lays about him on every side, and makes that good of himself, that some have affirmed of Constantinus Copronymus, That he was neither Iew, Pagan, nor Christian, Sed colluvies quædam impietatis, but an arrant Atheist. So before him are said to have been Theodore of Cyrene, Euemerus, Hippo, Nicanor, and others mentioned by Clemens Alexandrinus: Such an one was that monster Caligula, that braved his god Jupiter and threatned him. And yet notwithstanding at every clap of thunder or flash of lightning, he ran under his bed, or sought somewhere to hide himself, as a frighted worm wriggles into his hole. Mentiuntur qui dicunt se non sentire esse Deum, saith Seneca. They lye that say they think there is no God. For though they say so to thee by day, yet they doubt thereof within themselves by night. Then fear comes upon them and trembling, which maketh all their bones to shake, as it did his, Iob 4. 14. And as it is reported of Tullus Hostilius (the third King of Romans) that turned the peoples mindes to the study of warlike discipline, despising Numa his predecessours sacrifice, and saying that religion did but effeminate mens minds, and make them unfit for noble imployments. Nevertheless Lactantius witnesseth, that this King fained to himself and worshipped two new Gods, Pauorem & Pallorem, Fear and Paleness; Gods that he carried about with him in his own bosom, and could not shake off. For as any man is more desperately wicked and irreligious, so he is more vexed with the terrours of his own conscience, which is Gods spie and mans overseer, and stings him, betwixt whiles, with unquestionable conviction, and horrour. It was an Atheistical speech of Statius the Poet, ſtricken into mens minds after ſin, were ſufficient. For theſe muſt needs come from a Judge that deteſteth diſhoneſty, and exerciſeth judgement upon the ſoul. Richard the third of England felt this. And ſo did Charls the ninth of France. The former, after the murder of his two innocent Nephews, had fearful dreams: inſomuch that he did often leap out of his bed in the dark, and catching his ſword (which alway naked ſtuck by his ſide) he would go diſtractedly about the chamber, every where ſeeking to find out the cauſe of his own occaſioned diſquiet. The later, after the bloody maſſacre of Paris, could ſeldom take any ſound ſleep; being as terrible to himſelf, as he formerly had been to others: and could never endure to be awakened out of ſleep without muſick, or ſome like diverſion. Now could theſe men poſſibly either conclude or ſuſpect there was no God?

Some I confeſs there are that lay violent hands upon all the principles in their heads, and do what they can to tear them out, that they may ſin the more freely. They are loth to confeſs a God, for fear to ſtand in awe of him, and yet (will they, nill they) the fear of the leaſt things maketh them to confeſs him. Nay, becauſe they fear not him that made all things, therefore they ſtand in awe of all things: As Ahaz that trembled as a ſhaken leaf, and his grandſon Manaſſeh, that hid his head among the thorns, and from thence was pulled, and bound with fetters. He that had faced the heavens, and neither feared God nor cared for man, is now at his wits ends for the fear of his heart wherewith he did fear, and for the ſight of his eyes, which he did ſee, Deut. 28. 67. What would ſuch Atheiſts then do, did they but ſee hell? Bellarmine is of opinion that one glimpſe of hell were enough to make a man not only turn Chriſtian and ſober, but Anchorite and Monk, to live after the ſtricteſt rule that may be: And yet he tels us of a certain Advocate of the Court of Rome, that being at point of death, ſtirred up by the ſtanders by to repent, and call upon God, with a conſtant countenance, and without ſign of fear, he turned his ſpeech to God, and ſaid; Lord, I have a deſire to ſpeak unto thee, not for my ſelf, but for my Wife and children. For I am haſtening to hell, neither is there any thing that thou ſhouldeſt do for me. And this he ſpake, ſaith Bellarmine (who was there preſent and heard it) as if he had ſpoke of a journey to ſome village or town, and was no more affrighted. Surely had this man had a right apprehenſion of hell-torments endleſs, eaſeleſs, remedileſs, ſuch as he ſhould never be able to abide or avoid, he could not have made ſo light account of them. But a diſcourſe of hell is but as painted fire which burns not; or as the painting of the toad, which men can look on and handle without without affrightment. Of Pope Clement the fifth it is reported, That when a Nephew of his (whom he had loved ſenſually (and ſinfully) died, he ſent his Chaplain to a Necromancer, to learn how it fared with him in the other world. The Conjurer ſhewed him to the Chaplain lying in a fiery bed in hell: which when it was told the Pope, he never joyed more after it, but within a ſhort while died alſo. But to moſt men it may be juſtly ſaid, as Cato did once to Caſar, I believe that thou thinkeſt all that is ſaid of hell to be falſe and fabulous.

Tu ta adeo, cui res trepidæ, reverentia divûm Naſcitur. Silius. l. 7.

Men live (alas) as if they ſhould ne'r die:
Or as if hell were a meer foppery.

Heu vivunt homines, tanquam mors nulla ſequatur, Aut velut infernus fabula vana foret.

And this is that (2) Atheiſm in practice, ſo rife in all places: for of ſuch duſt-heaps (that confeſs God with their lips, but deny him in their lives) ye may finde in every corner. All places are full of them, and ſo is hell too.

1. Some think baſely of God, as if he were altogether ſuch an one as themſelves, becauſe he keeps ſilence and bears with their evil manners, Pſalm 50. 21. Averroes the Philoſopher hence draws an argument againſt Gods preſence and providence here on earth, thinks he medleth with nothing below the Moon, becauſe of his ſlowneſs to anger.

θεοστυγεῖς γένος Acts 13.

2. There are again that grant a God, but made all of mercy; and thereupon lay the reins in the neck, to do wickedly with both hands earneſtly, as preſuming of an eaſie and ſpeedy pardon. Nahum tels us, That God is jealous, and the Lord revengeth, and is furious, &c. And that ſuch as theſe are but as ſtubble laid out in the Sun a drying, that it may burn the better; and like grapes let to hang in the Sun-ſhine till they be ripe for the wine-preſs of Gods wrath, Rev. 15. 16.

Nah. 1. 2, 10.

3. Others look upon God as a juſt judge, and ſharp revenger of ſin and diſobedience, and hereupon could wiſh (for their own eaſe) that there were no God. This is Deition of his death as map; in deſpairing, he did what in him lay to take away his life, as cidium, God-slaughter. The good soul wisheth with David, Vivat Deus! let God live, and blessed be the God of my salvation. But the wicked is a hater of God, Rom. 1. 30. and so a murtherer of him, according to that 1 Joh. 3. 15. He that hateth any is a murtherer.

Eccles. 10. 12. ——Servi ut taceant, jumenta loquentur.

This is a high and hateful degree of Atheism. If a man curse the King in his heart, and wish him out of the world, the sin is so hainous, that the fowls of heaven shall disclose it: How horrible then is this same sin against the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords?

4. Some again have bald conceits of God as if he were an old man sitting in heaven, with a crown on his head, a scepter in his hand, and had the parts and proportions of a man, as the Papists picture him. God made man after his image, and men (to requite him) will need make God after their image; cast him anew in their base mould, and make an idol of him. In the year of Christ 403. this foolish and Atheisticall question, An Deus corporeus sit? Whether the divine essence be a true body, having his hands, feet, &c. as men have stirred up great strife among the Monks of Ægypt; For the ruder and more ignorant sort of them, held that it was so. Xenophanes was wont to say, That if beasts were able to paint, they would pourtray God like to themselves; because they could not naturally conceive any further. So do these natural brute beasts (as Peter calleth them) made to be taken and destroyed, speak and think evil of God whom they know not, and so utterly perish in their own destruction, 2 Pet. 2. 12.

5. Other practical Atheists there are not a few, that deny not God indeed, but dethrone him, which is as bad; whiles they are lovers of pleasures more then lovers of God: make their belly their god, their gold their god, yea the god of this world their god, coming to them especially with offers of honours and promotions, All this will I give thee. In too many families (saith one) Venus hath her altars in the chambers, and Bacchus his sacrifices in the butteries: Which two having made their dividend, and shared their devotes, alas what a poor third will be left for God? Thus he. Will a man rob his God? The blinde Heathens would not deal so ill by their dung-hill Deities. Yet ye have robbed me, saith the Lord of hosts. Not in tithes and offerings only, but in offering up your selves, your souls and bodies to be a holy, lively and acceptable sacrifice unto me, yea in loving the Lord your God with all your soul, minde and might, and your neighbour as your selves, which is better then all burnt sacrifices, as that Scribe understandingly answered. Not but that there may be, and are sacrificing Sodomites, as Isa. 1. 10. Arch-atheists, arrant hypocrites, that bring thousands of rams, and rivers of oil, that offer largely, and would give any good for a dispensation, even the sons of their body for the sins of their souls. But they do worse then lose their labour, they commit sin. For, The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord; how much more when he bringeth it with an evil heart, saith Solomon; as thinking to couzen God with a carkase (as Prometheus would have done his Jupiter) with an outside, a form of godliness, a shadow of religion. Surely God may say to these Atheists, as once Isaac did to his father, Behold the fire and the wood, but where is the lamb? Or as Jacob did to his sons that brought him Josephs bloody coat, Here is the coat, but where is the childe? Cainistæ sunt, saith Luther, offerentes non personam, sed opus personæ. These are of Cains kindred that offer to God the work done, but themselves they do not offer: they draw nigh to God with their lips, but their hearts are far from him. God also will be as far from them, when they have most need of him, as he was from Saul, that hypocritical Atheist. God hath forsaken me, saith he, and the Philistims are upon me. So, sickness, death, hell, is upon me, and God hath forsaken me; neither is it my Lord, Lord, that can bring him back to my help and deliverance. The Swan in the law was white in feathers, yet reputed unclean, and unmeet for sacrifice, because the skin under them was black. Wash therefore your hands, ye sinners; but withal, cleanse your hearts, ye double-minded, James 4. 8. God is not mocked, Gal. 6. nor an hypocritical service accepted; dissembled sanctity is double iniquity.

To end this Discourse (and so this first Decad) David gives us the sure signs of an Atheist, Psal. 14.

Marks of an Atheist.

First, A disordered life. No sooner doth the fool conceit there is no God, but presently follows, Corrupt are they, and do abominable, vers. 1. Yea they prevaricate, till they stink again, v. 3. as the old world did, that was grown so foul, that God was fain to wash it with a flood. All sin is both, 1. from Atheism; for did men believe a God that that saw all, and would punish all, they durst not but be innocent: And 2. to Atheism. The best that can come of sin is repentance; which if men have no minde to, they will be willing to turn Atheists, and it is the best of their play, to wipe out all notions of a Deity as much as may be, for their own quiet, lest they fall into a hell above-ground, and be tormented before their time. Hence flow all exorbitancies in mens lives. Hence there is no hoe in sinning. For what (saith one) should, or can keep the wit and will of man in, when once we conceit, there is no such thing as God? And from the weakness of this spring (saith another) flow all enormities. Men say in their hearts, It may be there is an Almighty God, it may be not: and thence they will have some care in the duties of religion, but a full care they have not: whereas, if they did believe it fully, they would serve him with a full and perfect heart. Thus he. David walked before God with an upright heart in all things, save only in the matter of Uriah: In that one particular he despised both God and his Commandment, 2 Sam. 12. 11. and that out of the venom of original lust, the master-vein wherein is Atheism. Thus in general. Then,

M. Capell of tempt. p. 265.

D. Preston his sensible demonstration of the Deity.

II. Secondly (for particulars.) The Atheist is a great oppressor of others, a very catiff-Canibal, vers. 4. He eats up Gods people as he eats bread. He tears the very flesh off the poor, and sels them (that which he leaves of them) for old shoes, as the Prophet hath it: David in another Psalm compares these Atheistical men-eaters to a lion couchant and rampant. God is not in all his thoughts, saith he, Psal. 10. 4. What follows? He lieth in wait secretly as a lion: he lieth in wait to catch the poor; he doth catch the poor when he draweth him into his net, that is, into his bonds, debts, morgages, &c. As the Jews in Nehemiah had done their poor brethren, whom therefore he taxeth of Atheism and irreligion; Ought ye not to have feared God, saith he, and not to have dealt thus hardly with your brethren? I pray you let us leave off this usury. So Job to his friends, those uncharitable censurers. To him that is in misery pitty should be shewed from his friend, but he forsaketh the fear of the Almighty, Job 6. 14. Or, as David expresseth in the place above-cited, He saith in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hideth his face, he will never see it. Hence it is that he sitteth in the lurking places of the villages, in the secret places doth he murther the innocent, his eyes are privily set against the poor. He not only robs the poor, but ravisheth him; he not only murders him, but eats him up as bread; he makes no more conscience to undo a poor man, then to eat a meals meat when he is hungry. A poor mans substance is his life. The poor widdow cast into the treasury all that she had, even all her living, saith the text, Mark 12. 44. It is in the original, All her life. So she with the bloody issue is said to have spent all her life, that is, her livelyhood upon Physitians, Luke 8. 43. For a poor man in his house, is like a snail in his shell; crush that, and ye kill him; which the Atheist cares not to do, as who fears not God, and so regards not man, Luke 18. 2.

Mica. 3. 2, 3.

Neh. 5. 9, 10.

Psa. 10. 8—11.

III. Thirdly, The Atheist cals not upon God, saith David there, either in Church or chamber, unless it be for fashion sake, and that he may not be held a rank Atheist. The gross hypocrite (whom I have proved an Atheist) may make a goodly praier for matter, and set a gloss, a grace upon it in the utterance, but it is but lip-labour, and so lost labour, the effect of art and parts, not of the heart and spirit of grace and supplication, Zach. 12. 10. Some short-winded wishes he may have, Psal. 4. 6. not pour out his soul with groans unutterable.

As beggars have learned to cant, so Atheists to pray.

IV. Lastly, Reproaching religion, and casting contempt upon those that profess and practise it, is a note David gives of an Atheist, vers. 6. You have shamed the counsel of the poor, because God is his refuge. See it in Ishmael and Michal, Tobiah and Sanballet, in Herod and Pilate. What's truth? saith he to our Saviour, John 8. 38. in a scornful profane manner. Herod also having been long desirous to see Christ, and hoping to see some miracle done by him (as by some base jugler) when he could obtain nothing of him, set him at nought, and mocked him, Luke 23. 11. So did Julian and Lucian the primitive Christians: contemptuously calling them Galileans; Ulpian, deceivers; Demetrian, and other Heathen Atheists, procurers of all publike calamities: crying out therefore, Christianos ad leones, To the lions with these Christians. Tantum mali quia Christiani, as Pliny said of them. No otherwise evil then for that they were Christians. So far did ignorance and malice prevail in the world among those, I mean, that were ἄθεοι, without God in the world, that it was counted a capital crime to call himself himself a Christian. A sect everywhere spoken against of old, Acts 28. 22. and so is still. Every fool that saith in his heart there is no God, hath out of the same quiver a bolt to shoot at goodness. Barren Michal hath too many sons, Qui scoptice & scabiosè de bonis loquuntur, as one saith, who speak scornfully and scurvily of men much better then themselves, reproaching religion for hypocrisie, sincerity for singularity, strictness for silliness. In Italy (saith one, and I wish it were not so in England) they hold integrity for little better then silliness, and abjectness. And it is notoriously known (saith another) that the most honorable name of Christian, is in Italy and at Rome, a name of reproach, and usually abused to signifie a Fool or a Doit. They boast themselves rather in the name of Catholike. So did the Rogatian and Arrian hereticks before them; calling the true Christians Ambrosians, Athanosians, Homousians, &c. As these their successors did, Wiclevists, Waldenses, Hussites, and now of late Lutherans, Zuinglians, Calvinists, Puritans, and what not? The Atheists in Nehemiah's time thought to have jeared the good Jews out of their forwardness to re-build the City. And so did the Papists (herein Atheists) hope by like arts to have weakned the hands of the renowned Reformers. Erasmus also (that mongrel in religion) that was Mente & dente potens, as one saith of him, how bitter is he against Luther in his Hyperaspistis, declaring thereby what spirit he was of? And what a dry wipe was that he gave Wolphangus Capito, Qualem à se Capito decimum fore sperat? He could not deny (saith Mr. Calvin) but that Capito was a holy man, and one that took very good pains to purge the Church. But whereas he held it as bootless a business, and impossible for Christs Ministers to seek to correct the worlds wickedness, as to make a river run backward, under the person of that one man, he condemned us all of inconsiderate zeal. Howbeit wisdom is justified of her children. Mat. 11. 19. Or (as some learned men read that text) wisdom is judged of her children: That is, Those that pretend to be her children (as Erasmus with his fellow-Pharisees did) they perversly and prepostorously pass sentence upon their Mother, whom they ought, as dutiful children to hearken and submit to. But many learned men are arrant Atheists: as were not only the Sadducees, but these Pharisees also, that out of the venome of their spirits, could not but mock at the precious and heart-piercing Sermons of the Son of God, Luke 16. 14. Religion was not more with them a matter of form, then of scorn, a manifest mark of the worst kind of wicked, Psal. 1. 1. a right note of a rank Atheist, Isa. 21. 11. and 22. 13. 2 Pet. 3. 3.
